Hails Reagan Offer to Visit German Graves

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

BONN — Chancellor Helmut Kohl described President Ronald Reagan on Thursday as "a friend of our people" for agreeing to lay a wreath next month at a German military cemetery. The chancellor gave no hint that he intended to release the U.S. leader from his Mr. Kohl told the Bundestag: "I find it most regrettable that this great man, who is a friend of the GE, nans, has encountered considerable domestic difficulties because of this envisaged noble gesture. Let me state this as a German and as the German chancellor," he continued, his voice cracking, "I am grateful to him for the attitude he has once again demonstrated." Mr. Kohl spoke during a debate that was meant to review the first two years of his coalition's fouryear parliamentary mandate; but the debate was dominated by the controversy over the Reagan itiner-

The president has come under sharpening pressure in the United States to renounce the May 5 stop at the cemetery in Bitburg because affen SS combat troops are among its dead.

"Of the 49 SS soldiers named there," the chancellor said, "32 were younger than 25 when they died. Their short lives are much shorter than the space of time that has elapsed since their deaths. Today we are discussing on both sides of the Atlantic the fate of SS soldiers who died 40 years ago."
Mr. Kohl added: "I do not venture to judge those who experi-enced all the horror and barbarity of the Third Reich at Auschwitz, Treblinka and Bergen-Belsen, who are unable to forget those occur-rences, what they suffered and what their next of kin suffered, and who are unable to forgive."

Mr. Sherick was appointed to head the Pentagon's oversight activities two years ago after Congress established the post.

Mr. Sherick, discussing the issue of improper overhead expenses billed against government coniracts, characterized the industry's estitude as "we stole it fair and square." WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan, declaring that the United States cannot "stay on the immoral, dead-end course of deficit spending," has appealed to the public to support a budget plan by Senate Republicans that would cut next year's deficit by $52 billion.

In the first nationally televised address from the Oval Office of his second term, Mr. Reagan said the economic gains of the last few years were at stake in the Senate budget votes this week.

"All our progress, all the good we've accomplished so far, and all our dreams for the future could be wrecked if we do not overcome our one giant obstacle," he said.

Mr. Reagan warned that he would veto any tax increase and said he could not compromise further on defense spending. He called instead for a large number of cuts in domestic programs, including the elimination of some activities. calling it unfair in many instances

Students protested Wednesday at Harvard, California and the University of Wisconsin, among other schools.

Those activities contrast sharply with the popular image, developed in the mid-1970s, of university campuses as passive bastions of conservatism and of students as self-absorbed and exclusively career-oriented. Talks with students

"In my eight years, the climate on campus has certainly changed enormously," said Tom Keenan, a 25-year-old graduate student at Yale University. That seems to be what is happening this year."

The aid at issue Wednesday was only for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30. Mr. Reagan has requested $28 million for the next fiscal year, and the battle over that request could begin in the next few months.

Representative Thomas P. Gould Collection Paintings Sell for $32.6 Million | Karami Agrees to Stay

By Souren Melikian

NEW YORK - Fifty-six paintings and drawings from the collection of the late Florence Gould, most of them by Impressionists and early 20th-century masters, were sold Wednesday night at Sotheby's for $32.6 million. It was the highest total for one person's collection ever achieved at a single auction ses-

Much of the money from the sale will be donated to the American Hospital in Paris in accordance with the wishes of Mrs. Gould. She was the widow of Frank Jay Gould, the heir to a U.S. railroad fortune, and the daughter of Maximilien Lacaze, a French publishing magnate in the United States. Mrs. Gould died in February 1983 at age 87.

The sale, which included record prices for works by four painters, illustrated the continuing strength of the market where major works of art are concerned. But there were no surprises. The two most important paintings sold within the expected price bracket, Van Gogh's "Pay-sage au Soleil Levant," painted at int-Rémy in southern France in November 1889, went for $9.9 million, including the 10 percent

In the Shadows of Summits, Former Leaders Find a Spotlight

Helmut Schmidt, left, the former West German chancellor, with Jacques Chaban-Delmas, former prime minister of France, at a session Thursday of the InterAction Council.

ronal Herald Tribune PARIS — That journalistic cliche, a club of elder statesmen, exists: 30 former leaders of their countries are holding a shadow summit in Paris to formulate some wisdom for their successors at the economic summit, opening in Bonn on May 2.

"We may be the world's most exclusive club," said Jacques Chaban-Delmas, a former French prime minister. "Even the French Academy takes applications for membership; we don't."

Called the InterAction Council, the group of former government leaders has an illustrious roster. Active members include Takeo Fukuda of Japan, Helmut Schmidt of West Germany, James Callaghan of Britain, Malcolm Fraser of Australia, Giulio Andreotti of Italy, Léopold Sédar Senghor of Senegal, Adolfo Suárez of Spain and Pierre Elliott Trudeau of Canada. The council also includes former leaders from Yugoslavia and other East European countries, from the Pacific basin and from North Africa. Most operated on the liberal side of the political spectrum, and corridor conversations are full of nos-talgia for the 1970s when they held high office and when détente, development and international cooperation seemed to flourish.

Officially, the council denies its members share any ideological color or even a feeling that summitry is not what it used to be. The council's purpose, according to Mr. Chaban-Delmas, a founding member, is "to draw our successors' attention to major issues which they may neglect under the pressure of day-to-day busi-

Like other high-powered old-boy networks such as the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderberg conference or the forums sponsored by former U.S. presidents, the InterAction Council helps its members, who are unpaid, to maintain contacts and visibility that help qualify them as consultants and lecturers. Council members are aware they could be viewed as warhorses who refuse to go to pasture. "Some people call us 'has-beens,' but we think of our successors as people training on the job to join our club," said a participant. Some expect to return to power: the council's only woman, Maria de Lourdes Pintasilgo, is a leading contender to become Portugal's next president. If she does, she will have to leave the club - an alumna that the InterAction Council would try to sway with its At council meetings, timed to precede the annual economic summits, members try to agree on a few key recommendations on issues they fear are being overlooked, then fan out to lobby world leaders. For example, this year the council is emphasizing the international debt crisis: While the debt is not a high priority for the Bonn economic summit, it remains a catastrophic and urgent problem for the poorest debtor countries.

The council shuns lengthy reports — "They have a habit of gathering dust," Mr. Chaban-Delmas said — and stresses "action," that is, personal contact. Last year, council members, in the weeks prior to the London economic summit, met most of the partici-

U.S. to Ask Summit Partners To Offset American Slowdown

nal Herald Tribune PARIS - President Ronald Reagan will seek a pledge from West European and Japanese leaders at their summit meeting in Bonn next week to stimulate their economies to offset the slowdown in the growth of the U.S. economy. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker 3d said Thursday.

Mr. Baker said that Europe could ease or eliminate obstacles to growth in domestic financial and labor markets, while Japan should accelerate elimination of import consumption in its econony.

The administration hopes that the slack in the United States will be picked up by Europe and Japan," without creating new inflation, Mr. Baker said in an interview by satellite from Washington with reporters in the six countries, other. than the United States, involved in the summit meeting. He ruled out urging new government spending programs, however, or what he de-scribed as "pumping up the econo-my by artificial means."

The Treasury secretary said Mr.

"There was very strong endorse-

Mr. Baker also said Mr. Reagan would seek a pledge from other summit participants to designate 1986 for the start of new trade liberalization negotiations.

Mr. Baker emphasized that the administration would be seeking to avoid confrontation with summit partners from West Germany, Britain, France, Japan, Italy, Canada and the European Community Commission. The EC member countries, led by France, have declined to agree to start trade talks next year, but they have agreed on preparatory meetings.

There will be "no ganging up on anybody," Mr. Baker said. According to U.S. officials, that meant that the administration has eased away from its earlier suggestion, expressed privately, that West Germany should accelerate tax cuts totaling 20 billion Deutsche marks ($6.4 billion) planned for 1986 and 1988. Chancellor Helmut Kohl's government has firmly rejected the

"I seriously doubt that the presi-dent will lecture Helmut Kohl, or cratic-controlled House. anybody else, on precisely what actions they should take to stimulate their economies," another adminis-tration official said in Washington.

The agenda for the May 2-4 meeting will be kept informal and flexible, U.S. and European officials said, with discussions among the leaders expected to cover political, security, environmental and Third World issues, as well as economic problems. French officials said Wednesday that President François Mitterrand would present a plan to combat famine and drought in Africa. It calls for the financing of two satellite ground stations, improved transportation of relief food supplies and intensified research on grain production in arid zones south of the Sahara.

"I'm not surprised at what's hap-pening," he said. "Many students and programs currently under way in Africa, will get "considerable attention," the administration

The president's address followed the central theme of his four years in office: a shift in federal priorities away from domestic spending and toward defense while cutting taxes. It also followed past themes in laying the blame for the record peacetime deficits of his presidency on domestic programs, many of which grew out of the Great Society legislation of the 1960s and '70s.

Mr. Reagan's speech also came against the backdrop of slowing economic growth.

The White House chief of staff, Donald T. Regan, said before the president's address: "Our economy is not that strong at this time." Only a few months ago, before the election. Mr. Reagan was saying economic growth would largely reduce the deficit; he did not make that claim Wednesday night.

Yelena Bonner Seeks Review of Exile

MOSCOW (AP) — Yelena G. Bonner, the wife of Andrei D. Sakharov, the dissident Soviet physicist, has asked officials for a review of her case, sources say. She was sentenced to five years of internal exile last summer for slandering the state.

Mrs. Bonner and Mr. Sakharov have been in forced exile in Graki, 250 miles (400 kilometers) east of Moscow. The city is closed to foreigner.

The sources, who spoke to Western journalists Tuesday on conditions anonymity, said that Mrs. Bonner had sent a letter to the Presiding of the Supreme Soviet asking that her term of internal exile be reviewed. The Presidium has the authority to review and revise sentences.

Guerrilla Suspect Arrested in Italy

ROME (Reuters) — Vittorio Antonini, suspected of playing a major role in the 1981 kidnapping of U.S. Brigadier General James L. Dozier, was arrested Thursday, police said.

The police said that Mr. Antonini, 29, also a suspected leader of the Red Brigades guerrilla group, was arrested during a raid on a house 40 kilometers (25 miles) from Rome. Police said several Red Brigades documents were found in the house, including leaflets claiming responsi-bility for the kidnapping of General Dozier, who later was released inharmed in a raid by the authorities.

Mr. Antonini has already been sentenced in absentia to 26 years prison for his alleged part in the kidnapping. He also faces several minder charges, including the killing of two police officers.

U.S. Says Iran May Use Chemical Arms

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The State Department has expressed concern that Iran may have developed an arsenal of chemical weapons to use in retaliation against Iraq.

"We are aware that Iran has been seeking to develop a chemical weapons capability," said Bernard Kalb, the State Department spokesman, "and it may now be in a position to use such weapons,"

In the last 13 months, the United States has twice accused Iraq of using mustard gas and nerve gas against Iranian forces. Wednesday was the first time that Washington has said that Iran might also be preparing to use such weapons. The two countries have been at war for almost five Officials said the death toll was likely to go much higher because 24 people were reported missing after clashes Monday between Hindus and Moslems in a labor camp near the state capital of Ahmedabad. That fighting left 5,000 homeless.

painting, a portrait in oils on board painted by Toulouse-Lautrec in 1895, established a record for the artist when it was bought at $5.28 million. The name of the buyer was not disclosed Two other records were established. Early in the sale, a painting of a vase of flowers by Gustave Courbet, who preceded Impressionism, went for $1.21 million. Camille Pissarro's "Rue de La Cita-delle, Pontoise," dated 1873 and the view of a street in a provincial town under snow, was sold for $850,000.

A remarkable price, although not a record, was paid for an outstanding early landscape by Jean-Baptiste Camille Corot. Entitled "Rome: Ile et pont San Bartolo-meo." it was painted on paper laid down on canvas during Corot's first trip to Italy. It illustrates the artist's feel for light and shadow, which he retained later in his Roman period. Considered by many the masterpiece in that style, it went for $850,000.

In contrast, there were a number of disappointments, Half the paintings sold under the lowest estimates, including Corot's "Vue du Pincio, Italie," which immediately followed the sale of his other paintng and sold for $200,000.

late Georges Wildenstein, the dealer in whose office it hung until his death. Daniel Wildenstein, a devoted friend of Mrs. Gould, who had always wanted the painting, sold it to her only after his father's death. Another disappointment was a still life done by Manet in 1882.

The hammer went down at $300,000 against an estimate of $400,000 to $500,000. Only three lots, representing 2 percent of the total, remained unsold. These failures were not due to any cooling of the market but re-flected the exaggerated estimates put on nearly all the paintings for lowing an extensive promotional campaign. Confederate flag still flies in many places in the South.

U.S. South Is Furling Flag Long After Defeat

By William E. Schmidt New York Times Service

ATLANTA - For the first time in years, the mammoth Confederate battle flag did not fly this spring in front of the Kappa Alpha fraternity house at Auburn University.

Amid complaints that the banner is a symbol of racism and an affront to blacks, the president of the Alabama school, James Martin, banned the display of the 20- by 40-foot (6.08- by 12-meter) flag during the fraternity's annual celebration of Old South Week.

One hundred and twenty vears after General Robert E. Lee surrendered to the North's General Ulysses S. Grant, the flag that once led Confederate armies into battle continues to be an object of emotion and sometimes anger in this region of the United States.

Many Southerners defend it as a proud emblem of their anebellum heritage, Others insist it is a bloody shirt waved in the faces of blacks.

Two months ago, The Atlanta Constitution newspaper, in an editorial that generated angry responses from many read-ers, argued that the Stars and Bars should be removed from the field of the Georgia state flag, where it had been placed in 1956 by defiant state lawmakers reacting in part, to the rising tide of civil rights protests across the region. The newspa-per described the state flag as an "intentional insult" to black

In Alabama, blacks sued nine years ago to have the Confederate flag taken down from stop the flaggole outside the state capitol in Montgomery, where it had been ordered placed by a segregationist governor, John M. Patterson

At the University of Mississippi, two years ago, black and white students faced off in an angry confrontation over the Confederate flag, leading uni-versity officials to declare an end to its use as the school's official emblem.

At Auburn, members of Kappa Alpha, a fraternity based largely in the South and founded in 1865 in reverence of Lee, were angered by Mr. Martin's

Sandinist Visits Foe: An Archbishop Obando, Named a Cardinal, Symbolizes Resistance to Ortega

Washington Pasi Service MANAGUA — When news reached here Wednesday that Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo is to become a cardinal, one of the first to pay respects was the prelate's most powerful adversary, President Daniel Ortega Sasvedra.

The courtesy call at the bishopric by Mr. Ortega, who were the olive uniform of the Sandinist revolution and drove his own black jeep, was a sign of Archbishop Obando's key political role in this country even before Rome announced his ascension to cardinal. Observers forecast that with the new mark of respect from Pope John Paul II, Archbish-op Obando's visibility is likely to increase in coming months as Mr. Ortega deals with the Nicaraguan church hierarchy and its opposition to his Sandinist government.

Archbishop Obando, who has headed the Managua diocese since 1970, has become a formidable leader of the internal opposition. using his strong personal populari-ty and the deep Catholic faith of many Nicaraguans in his struggle against the revolution's Marxist leanings. In the absence of an identifiable opposition political hero, particularly with a censored press, the prelate is the most visible symbol of peaceful resistance for Nicaraguans living here who oppose the Sandinist revolution. In the same manner, the archbishop frequently displayed his distaste for the repression of the late President Anastasio Somoza, who was overthrown by the Sandinists in 1979. As a result, when Edén Gómez Pastora, as Commander Zero, took over the National Palace in 1978, it was Archbishop Obando that the Sandinist guerrillas called on to mediate with the president.

Archbishop Obando, 59, was born in the cattle country of Chontales province. Short and thick, he has the dark skin and directness of Nicaragua's peasant majority.

It was in repeated visits to peasant villages as a younger priest, often riding a mule, that Archbishop Obando gained his popularity among the country's poor. But in his 15 years as the

But the water must be germfree. Sulfate-reducing bacteria would otherwise turn the oil sour, causing severe corrosion of the oil-handling equipment and piping.

Sterilizing the water with ultraviolet (UV) light is the method accepted today.

For the North Sea's Ekofisk oilfield, Phillips Petroleum in Norway have ordered from Brown Boveri a complete UV sterilization plant, together with all the plant and process engineering. The installation will treat 2500 m³ of seawater per hour.

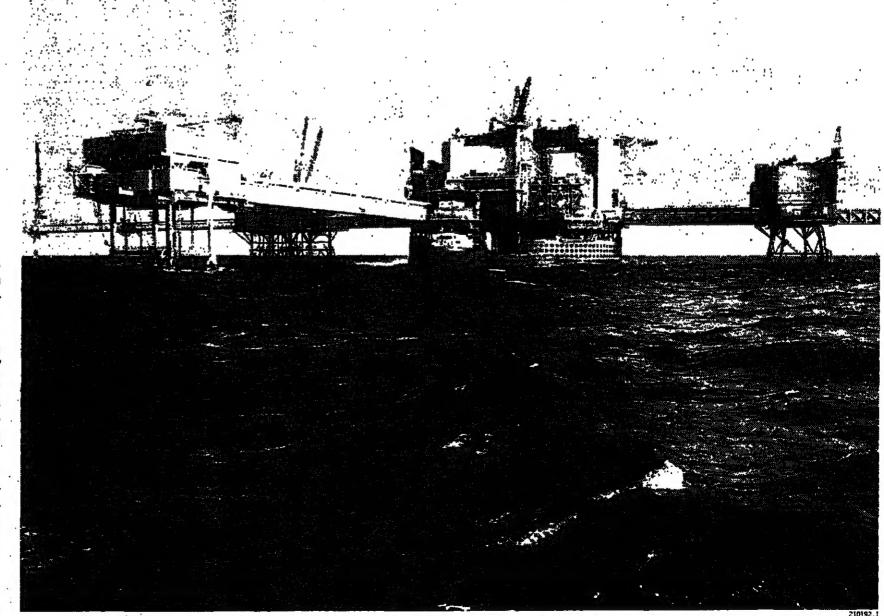

The Brown Boveri system meets the requirements of offshore operations: it needs little space, it is light, highly reliable, low on maintenance and has an advanced control system.

Designed by BBC engineers in Switzerland and Norway, the UV sterilizer consists of 8 radiation lines, Each line contains a radiation chamber with 14 highintensity UV lamps and the associated piping and fittings.

The container package includes all the electrical equipment and instrumentation, and the whole is controlled and monitored by a computerized process control system.

Gorbachev Cools Ties to U.S.

Sharp Sally Called Bid to Improve International Stance

By Serge Schmemann

New York Times Service MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's unexpectedly sharp saily at the United States on Tuesday has thrown a new chill into what had seemed a warming of Soviet-American relations.

In the first six weeks of his rule as head of the Soviet Communist Party, the signs had seemed propi-tious. His early speeches had stressed the detente of old: anti-American statements in the press abated: a few more Jews were allowed to emigrate; and arms negotiators were meeting in Geneva.

> The Russians have sought to block President Ronald Reagan's plan for developing a space-based missile defense, while the Americans have tried to focus on reductions in medium-range and strate-gic missiles and bombers.

Second, Mr. Gorbachev's criticism of global U.S. behavior -- his charge of stepped-up political, economic, ideological and military activities against Communist and Third World countries — appeared to be in preparation for the Warsaw Pact summit meeting opening Friday in the Polish capital. The meeting is expected to renew the pact for another 20 years, and diplomats believed that Mr. Gorbachev had to dramatize the reason for its existence. Third, Mr. Gorbachev's tough talk may be related to the maneuvering that Mr. Reagan has initiat-ed for a meeting with the Soviet leader. Since Mr. Gorbachev took office, Mr. Reagan has called for a meeting, even an informal one.

Mr. Gorbachev, however, has remained publicly silent on such a Beijing before agreeing to meet meeting, and diplomats surmise with Mr. Reagan.

Some diplomats suspected that Mr. Gorbachev's courtship of China was part of an effort to bolster his international position. There has been speculation that he may seek a visit to

U.S. Ascribes the Arms Talk Impasse To Soviet Fixation on Space Defense

By Bernard Gwertzman

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — No progress was made in the first round of the Geneva arms talks with the Soviet Union because of a basic disagree-ment over how the talks should be conducted, U.S. officials say.

These officials took issue with Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, who in a speech Tuesday blamed the United States for the impasse in the three-part negotia-tions on strategic, medium-range and space weapons.

"We reject Mr. Gorbachev's claim that the U.S. negotiators are not seeking agreements at the nuclear and space arms talks," a White House official said Wednes-

The U.S. officials said the Soviet side had refused to bargain on cuts in strategic or medium-range nuclear weapons until the United States first agreed to negotiate a ban on research and deployment of space defense weapons. The United States, they said, offered proposals for cuts in the strategic and medium-range weapons but declined to negotiate curbs on research aimed at developing a space-based defense system, which is known officially as the Strategic Defense Initiative and popularly as "star wars." The U.S. position is that a ban on research cannot be verified and that, over the long run,

This disagreement emerged in January when the U.S. secretary of state, George P. Shultz, and the Soviet Union's foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, met in Geneva and agreed on setting up the new three-part arms negotiations.

"What happened basically is that the Soviets wanted, as was clear in January, to make the unity of the talks more important than the three parts," a U.S. official said. "They are pulling more to unity and we to the trinity. They wanted a ban on the Strategic Defense Initiative to dominate all three areas, and we wanted progress to be made in the other areas, without reference to

The Soviet delegation sought to unify the three-part negotiations, by having the strategic, mediumrange and space weapons subgroups meet together as often as possible, administration officials said. U.S delegates favored separate talks. They compromised by having some plenary sessions and space defense will help reduce the proposals public. He also announced that the Soviet Union would halt deployment of new me-dium-range missiles in Europe for six months, and would decide on a further freeze if the United States matched his offer. The U.S. rejected that idea on the ground that a freeze would preserve what the U.S. views as a Soviet advantage.

In an interview Wednesday, Kenneth W. Adelman, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said:

"The big picture is that the United States came in with more flexibility and a greater determination to move the process, and it seems that the Soviets came in with greater rigidity and less determination to move the process."

Referring to Mr. Gorbachev's speech, he said:

There is a new man in the Kremlin, but no new ideas were presented. The new man came up with all the same positions as the old men had come up with over the

"It is quite clear that in foreign policy you will get for a while, Gromyko with a smile," the official said. "That is not surprising. They don't have overwhelming problems in foreign affairs. Gorbachev's formal statements so far bear that out in spades. There has been nothing strikingly new and positive but enough to leave the door open for some movement along the line."

Another official said Moscow "had moved away" from agreements believed to have been made by Mr. Gromyko with Mr. Shultz in January. This official said Mr. not possible to verify a ban on research, but in the Geneva talks, putting together his team in the Soviet side insisted on having

Saying No to Genocide

Half a lifetime ago, the United Nations approved a treaty that declares the mass killing of ethnic, racial or religious groups an international crime. But that Genocide Convention has languished, unratified, in the U.S. Senate for 36 years, to the profound embarrassment of the nation that sponsored the Nuremberg trials. There never was any good excuse for hesitation. Every argument against the pact has long since been laid to rest.

The embarrassment can be remedied if the Senate Foreign Relations Committee heeds the Reagan administration and moves to ratify - without the demeaning reservation pressed by Senator Jesse Helms of North Carolina.

The word genocide, meaning the annihilation of an entire people or group, was coined in 1944 by Raphael Lemkin, an American scholar of Polish origin, to characterize the Nazis' slaughter of six million Jews. It has come to denote any such mass murder, like the 1915 killings of the Ottoman Empire's Armenians.
The UN convention binds 92 signatories to punish genocide as a crime in peace or war, thus broadening the Nuremberg war crimes doctrine. It defines genocide as the attempt to eliminate all or part of a group for reasons of race or ethnicity, by murder, by seizing its children or sterilizing its adults. It requires trial of the guilty where the crime occurs or by an international penal tribunal.

One flaw in the pact is that it fails clearly to proscribe mass killings for political reasons, as perhaps Pol Pot's slaughter of two million Cambodians. A further defect is that the signatories have yet to agree upon the penal tribunal. The Soviet-bloc nations expressly insist on denying jurisdiction to the World Court in The Hague; and Senator Helms, with the administration's regrettable tactical support, would adopt this Soviet reservation.

Utah's Senator Orrin Hatch opposes ratification altogether. He conjures the possibility that the treaty would empower the United Nations to cause the arrest of an Israeli in New York on charges of plotting genocide against Palestinians. This insults Congress, which must pass the enabling legislation that gives any ratified treaty legal teeth. It can be counted on to guard against Mr. Hatch's nightmare.

Phantom scenarios have haunted this treaty ever since President Harry Truman proposed ratification. It was once solemnly argued that declaring genocide a federal crime would violate the American states' rights to deal with murder. The American Bar Association waited until 1976 to reverse its opposition on the ground that creating international human rights compromised constitutional doctrines. But it has joined the imposing roll of organizations favoring approval.

Incredibly, much of the American opposition has been carried forward from old battles over domestic civil rights. The World Court came to be seen as a super-Supreme Court, the meddlesome bogey threatening to tell American states how to treat their own citizens.

The value of the Genocide Convention is that it legitimizes international scrutiny of genocidal policies, granting the victims at least a moral defense. The more appropriate objec-tion to the pact is that without practical enforcement procedures, signing it is a risk-free gesture. Thus the Soviet Union has piously censured the United States for decades for failing to ratify. But the inability of nations to enforce civilized standards is not an argument against proclaiming the elementary right of all peoples to live and procreate. To reject this convention is to desecrate the memory of the martyrs who inspired it.

-THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Rules Are Rules, but . . .

About two or three years ago the U.S. Office of Management and Budget clamped down on advocacy activities by nonprofit organizations receiving federal grants — organizations such as the Legal Defense Fund, Family and Child Services and so on. The office's proposed rules were very tough — so tough that they inevita-bly aroused suspicion that the Reagan administration's pursuit of them derived more from a desire to satisfy conservative demands to "de-fund the left" than from a concern for squeaky-clean management.

Nonetheless, we believed then - and still do believe - that tighter rules were justified, if perhaps not quite so tight as the budget office wanted. Federal rules ought to prohibit lobbying with federal money just as, for good and obvious reason, they prohibit use of federal money for advertising, party-giving or favors for federal officials.

True, maintaining separate services — separate copying machines? — would be much tougher for some child advocacy or legal services group than it would be for a major defense contractor, but fair is fair, as they say, and what's sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander — as long as the sauce is dished out evenly. The rules do apply to defense contractors?" we recall asking our budget office source at the time. "Oh, of course," he assured us. "In fact, Cap Weinberger is insisting on even tougher rules for the Pentagon."

From time to time something would happen that would make us feel a bit uneasy: charges by the General Accounting Office and others, for example, that Lockheed Corp. and the Pentagon had waged a massive joint lobbying campaign in 1982 to persuade the House of Representatives to approve another $10 billion purchase of C-5B cargo planes. Lockheed apparently had a computerized data base that kept a day-to-day tally on Pentagon and Lockheed lobbying assignments. "You're sure," we would ask our budget office friend, "that no Pentagon money is being used for lobbying?" "Cap is very tough on that," he assured us. Now we read that over the past few years a major defense contractor, Pratt & Whitney, has been treating Air Force officers to deepsea fishing charters and golf, entertaining Pen-tagon officials at lavish parties and making donations to art exhibits at the request of a general. And that when such charges were first questioned by an auditor in 1981, the Pentagon responded by investigating the auditor!

Meanwhile, General Dynamics was running up $244 million in improper overhead charges

— about enough to keep the entire Legal Services operation or the job-help program for welfare mothers operating for a year. And we did not even mention the small change: the country club dues, the kennel fees, the lobster feasts, the seminars for defense executives' wives, and so on. Although we still believe that fair is fair and that rules ought to be evenly applied, in the face of such gross abuse the question of how the old folks' league uses its Xerox machine somehow fades in importance.

We have been had. All of us. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Nancy Reagan's Good Work

Washington is rough on the spouses of its wielders of power, and most of all on the wife of the president of the United States. Whoever she is, she operates by borrowing the earned authority of her husband, and she is constantly reminded that she is something of an interlop-er. She has no official duties, but she is accountable unofficially to a vast flight of eagleeyed observers. It is hard to do much right.

Nancy Reagan, however, has done something extremely right. She has thrown herself into the fight against drug abuse with vigor and intelligence. If she had simply been shopping for a worthy cause, she might have picked a homier, more heartwarming or more photo-genic one. Instead, she picked a relatively ungainly and untended one where her particular contribution could be of special value: to display a commitment and to use the inevitable interest in her to draw others to the cause. The conference that Mrs. Reagan ran this week was a good illustration of her work. She brought together the wives of the leaders of 17 foreign countries to publicize the global nature of drug abuse - and of caring about drug abuse. This latter element emerged strongly from the conference. The women attendi seemed quite aware of the limitations of what they in their particular role can do. There was evident, however, an awareness of the human dimension of the drug problems in their re-spective countries, and of the requirement for a stronger community of concern rooted in family values and family ways. Does it make a difference in the end? How can it not make a difference for the idea to spread that drug abuse compels the alarm and the informed attention of responsible women like these? Their governments, while all friend-ly to the United States, are not all equally cooperative in the often very political matter of drug cooperation. Such difficulties are not to be swept under the rug, but the personal warmth and the shared purpose evident at the conference are important assets. For using the resources of her position to increase them, Mrs. Reagan deserves gratitude.

1910: Frost Nips American Orchards NEW YORK - Jack Frost seems to have done indescribable injury in the orchards in the Middle West [on April 23-24], thanks to the fact that spring is three weeks in advance because of the phenomenally mild March. For forty-eight hours Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Kansas, Texas, Illinois, Ohio, Minnesota and Kentucky have enjoyed either blizzards or freezing temperatures, and damage of $40,000,000 has been sustained. The Mississippi and Ohio valleys resembled the scenes of the historic 1860s. The sky was litter with incremental transfer. up with innumerable camp fires. Wood, coal and straw piles were set round in hundreds of orchards, while blankets and quilts were wrapped over pear, apple, plum and cherry trees ready to burst into bloom.

1935: Nazis Stifle 'Non-Aryan' Press BERLIN — Karl Amann, president of the Reich Press Chamber and Nazi press dictator, has dealt a deathblow to all church and non-Nazi newspapers in Germany. By a decree [issued April 25], Jews and other "non-Ary-ans" and all denominational bodies are excluded from influence in the newspaper pub-lishing field. The decree excludes from the histing field. The decrees excuses from the publishing field any person who cannot prove his own and his wife's pure Aryan descent back to 1800, regardless whether the person is a publisher, a partner in a publishing firm, or a member of the board of directors. Church newspapers suffer the most deadly blow. Publishers must cease business if their newspapers appeal to persons limited according to profesional or denominational considerations.

B OSTON — Why is President Reagan going to lay a wreath at the German cemetery in Bithurg? The question is not going to go away. It will never go away, because the reasons given are so trivial com-pared to the damage that would be done. The whole miserable business is a study in disproportion.

The starting point was politics.
Two like-minded politicians, Helmut Kohl and Ronald Reagan, saw a chance to do something for their cause. In their petty concerns they could not see that they were touch-ing on enormous moral and historical interests. And then, burned, they have been too proud and inflexible to change: so far, at least.

The political origin of the affair is plain from a fact of timing. The annual Western economic summit meeting is usually held in early June. This year's was moved up a month to the beginning of May.

WHAT CAN WE SAY TO GET OURSELVES OUT OF THES ONE. ?

That kind of change, involving heads of government, takes a good deal of arranging. It was arranged, by all signs, as a political favor to Chancellor Kohl.

The West German state of North Rhine-Westphalia holds an election on May 12. It is a crucial election for Mr. Kohl. His opponents, the Social Democrats, now control the state's legislature. Its premier, Jo-hannes Rau, is national deputy chairman of the Social Democratic Party and a potential leader. In short, the election gives Mr. Kohl a chance to defeat a possible future competitor for the chancellorship.

Hence the early Western summit conference. The hope was that a presidential visit to the Federal Republic one week before polling would rub some Reagan glamor off on Mr. Kohl and the Christian Democrats. And Mr. Reagan was ready to cooperate.

There is particular symbolism in the choice of Bitburg as a place to visit. The president is grateful to Mr. Kohl for being the European point man in favor of deploying Pershing-2 and cruise missiles. And Bitburg happens to be the site of one of the largest concentrations of U.S. nuclear weapons anywhere.

If nothing else were involved, Mr. Reagan's favor to a political friend abroad would raise few eyebrows. But much else was involved. The president of the United States was visiting the ground of the Nazis 40 years after their defeat. That fact, without more, touched the sensitivities of history and of millions of people. And then there was more. The Birburg cemetery turned out to include the graves of 47 SS men.

For a president to honor such a place was profoundly offensive to the survivors of Nazi terror, those who were tortured and hounded by the SS. And not only to the survivors: to anyone with a memory, anyone with the barest understanding of what the Nazis meant.

That was when the disproportion became so grotesque. Confronted with the awesome reality of the Holocaust and its meaning for this generation, Mr. Reagan and Mr. Kohl reacted as politicians: little ones.

The president said he had to go through with the visit to demonstrate reconciliation with Germany. He said twice that German soldiers who died for the Nazi cause were as much "victims" as the Jews and others beaten and gassed and burned to death in concentration camps. When his aides worried about political damage and tried to get the Germans to switch from the Bitburg site, Chancellor Kohl dug in his heels and said no.

This adventure in insensitivity will damage German-American understanding and internal German political maturity. For not all West Germans feel that the Bitburg visit must go ahead at all costs.

A leading West German political editor, Christoph Bertram of Die Zeit, has warned that Mr. Kohl and Mr. Reagan "have increased misun-derstanding." Writing in The Wash-ington Post, he said the two men had acted as if this were the 40th anniversary of just another war.

"World War II was not just another European war," Mr. Bertram said. "It was the darkest hour of European civilization. Its end brought to an end the world's most atrocious regime."
It is the failure to understand this reality that makes the symbolism of the visit to Bitburg unacceptable. Some critics of Mr. Reagan are taking pleasure in his mistake. I think it is just as disproportionate to make a political point of it. It is too serious, too devastating. I still cannot believe he will go to Bitburg.

The New York Times:

Why Brazilian Democracy Will Survive After Neves

NEVER AGAIN.

N EW YORK—The death of the president-elect of Brazil, Tancredo Neves, is a great loss for his country and the world. But it should not dash the encouraging prospects for Brazil's transition to democracy. The consummate political skills that "Tancredo" brought to the transition are lost. No other official can hope to enjoy the fervent trust he inspired. The new President, José Sarney, is suspect among both the outgoing military and the incoming democratic forces. But the rebirth of Brazilian democracy does not depend solely on leadership. For one thing, most of the country's other political leaders remain committed to democracy. For all their initial doubts about Mr. Sarney's legitimacy and capacity to govern, the people who worked with such exemplary skill to make Tancredo Neves the first civilian president in more than 20 years will now rally behind Mr. Sarney simply because he represents constitutional and democratic continuity. Mr. Neves's electoral calendar — direct elections in the state capitals in November 1985, elections for a Congress to serve as a Constituent Assembly in November 1986 and the possibility of direct presidential elections in November 1988 — is likely to gain increasing support. It is the least confrontational and most constitutional path. It would also give the left time to orga-nize under democratic conditions.

Second, the military is unlikely to cause trouble. The officers have their own complex reasons to respect the transition under Mr. Sarney. They know that Nuremberg-style trials of military abuses are much less likely in Brazil than in Chile and Argentina. where deaths and disappearances caused by the military may have been as much as 100 times more common (counted on a per capita basis). The desire to return to civilian rule was also strengthened by the Argentine-British war for the Malvinas, or Falkland Islands, which forced a debate

ca is to the east of Miami. If you want to fly from Lima to Los Angeles, the quickest way is through Miami is a flood of "controlled substances," which barely are. Controlled, that is. The drug traffic continues in spite of Crockett and Tubbs, the characters—and how!—on the American television show "Miami Vice."

Viewing that program is like being locked inside a rock video with two boys who, having overdosed on giving the military a sense of mission that has nothing to do with direct rule. Certainly, the military will contiane to play a significant economic role in Brazil, the sixth-largest arms exporting country in the world. In short, unless President Samey and the political parties prove totally un-able to control domestic political conflict, it is very unlikely that the military will feel called upon to top-procedures — not just as a temporary tactic, but as an enduring value. Lacking Tancredo Neves's credibility, Mr. Samey will undoubtedly find it hard to impose austerity mea-sures. He will also have to go further than Mr. Neves would have in pursuing visible social reforms — and will be hampered all the while by his country's external debt, the largest in the world. Yet even here he has some leeway. Unlike Argentina or Chile, Brazil recently developed a major in-dustrial plant. This new capacity is waiting for a revival of internal and external demand: already, in 1984,

Brazil had a record year of exports. The world debt crisis is not over however. Ask anybody in Brazil ployment. But even the Brazilian left 5 percent of its gross national prodis firmly committed to democratic uct merely to service the external debt: Tancredo Neves once called it taxation without representation." The debt crisis was containable last year, thanks largely to declining in-terest rates, declining oil prices and booming exports to the United States, but no one knows how long these favorable conditions will last.

It is a time of sadness but not despair in Brazil. The country has room to develop democracy and tem-porarily, at least, a tiny bit of room to develop its economy. History will deal harshly with the United States if it fails to help Brazil's democracy to evolve successfully — even as it pursues its own military obsession in Central America.

How Europe Can Help Central America

WASHINGTON — In the ongo-ing confusion and frustration in Washington over aid to Nicaragua, it may be useful to take another and maybe a different look at the report of President Reagan's Commission on Central America, issued on Jan. 11, 1984, and quickly forgotten.

It was in some ways a remarkable document. First, it put the military, economic and social aspects of the problem in historical perspective.

Second even during the emotional pressures of the 1984 presidential campaign, it was approved unani-mously by leaders of both political parties, by business and labor.

Nobody argued much with its analysis of the Central American problem, but its proposals were nib-bled to death by opponents who ob-jected to one part or the other rather than grappling with the whole report.

By George F. Will

MIAMI — "Look," says the mayor, turning and the mayor is in his sixth two-year term, and, like the gesturing toward the window and beyond at this city, is revved up.

By James Reston

Mr. Reagan supported the report in principle, which is his way. Some argued that there could be no military peace without economic reform financed by a kind of Marshall Plan for Central America.

Others insisted that there could be no practical economic solution without peace, or at least a reduction in the military violence.

So the plan was shelved, but Enter now in Washington the former chancellor of West Germany,

Helmut Schmidt, with another idea. If I heard him right, he said that maybe the Kissinger report should be reconsidered. It recognized the mili-tary threat from Cuba and the Soviet Union, and the urgent need to deal

Energy, Miami has; too much, some people think. It had ample energy even before Castro flooded it in 1980 with refugees lacking proper character references. But the mayor insists that Miami is a Latin American city only the way Boston is Irish.

Miami has been called "the Hong Kong of Latin America," but the mayor prefers to compare it to Beirut — before the civil war. He says Miami is to

Latin America what Beirut was to the Arab world: a center for commerce, pleasure and cosmopolitanism.

The big difference, the mayor says, is "the American flag" — the FBI, the Constitution, the law. But some Miamians think the difference is not big enough.

Of the drug money sloshing around, the mayor says:
"Is it a great part of Miami? Of course." Look, he says, Miami is the cocaine capital of the world only because the United States is the main cocaine market.

If all international cocaine merchants formed a single American company, that company would rank with Ford Motor Co. near the top of Fortune magazine's list of largest corporations. Recently some co-caine was found here in the cargo on a Colombian 747 airliner. The street value of the cocaine was $600

with the region's economic and social problems, but this, he thought, could not be resolved by military means or even by a new Marshall Plan

The Marshall Plan idea was too narrow, and it smacked of U.S. domination. The hope lay, he said, in wid-ening the economic restoration of the area, using the other Central American nations - the Contadora group - to lead the way to a regional solution, and bring other nations into a deal for peace and economic reconstruction of Central America.

Mr. Schmidt thought that the Central American problem was dividing the Western allies and that they would be willing to contribute to an economic aid program for peace, if the Reagan administration thought this might break the deadlock. I talked to Henry Kissinger about this, and he agreed that help from the European allies could be useful. He had talked to Chancellor Helmot Kohl of West Germany about the possibility of European aid, and Mr. Kohl had been helpful.

But Mr. Kissinger was cautious. He was not sure that the president wanted to look at the Central American report again, or get the Europeans involved in an economic solution. He thought Mr. Schmidt had a good idea, but it was up to the president, he thought, to pursue or ignore it. Still, as Mr. Schmidt suggested, the Kissinger report is the best analysis of the problem we have, and it should be read again. It made these points: "The use of Nicaragua as a base for Soviet and Cuban efforts to penetrate the rest of the Central American isthmus, with El Salvador the target of first opportunity, gives the conflict there a major strategic dimension...

This is a challenge to which the United States must respond."

And "beyond this, we are challenged to respond to the urgent hu-man needs of the people of Central America ... Our task now, as a nation, is to transform the crisis in Central America into an opportunity." Everybody agrees with this, and wants the support of both political parties and the Contadora nations to help resolve the conflict, but so far nobody except Mr. Schmidt has come up with a way to do it. Use the Marshall Pian idea, though Central America today is not like postwar Europe. Give it a new name, he proposes, use the Contadora na-tions, but also call on Europe and Japan to bring the Old World to the aid of the New, for a change ... It is not a very promising idea, but it is the only new one heard around here for a long time. The New York Times.

Vietnam's ive Lesson Five Lessons. For America

By Henry Steele Commager

A MHERST. Massachusetts — It is 30 years now since, heady with victory over Germany and Japan, the United States blended into the Victinam War. It is 20 years since President Lyndon Johnson (partly by the canery) induced the Congress to past of the fateful Tonkin Gull resolution. giving him a free hand to manging a full-scale war in Vietnam. It is years since the collapse of Vienna and the victory of the Viet. Gos forced the desperate American and drawal from Southeast Asia.

What does this tragic changes our history have to teach us?

First, the folly of supposting the providence—or history—has somehow appointed the United States be at once the conscience and applicement of the world, and authorized it to bustle about the global imposing its concepts, policies and solutions on other peoples and nations. The Founding Fathers, to be sure, thought that "the American was a new Adam in a new paradise," but they were content to let the rest of the world profit by their example.

Second, and with particular reference to Vietnam, it teaches the folly of deluding ourselves that we were not only an American and a European power, but an Asian power as we'd, and that we had both the right and the ability to impose our solutions to age old problems on the peoples of that vast continent, a people even then in the throes of the greatest social revolution in history.

Third, the folly of assuming that if Vietnam should somehow embrace communism the whole of Southeast Asia would inevitably follow — the famous "domino theory," and with it the assumption that if that should happen, it would pose a mortal threat to the United States. (China has now been communist for 35 years, without posing any threat.)

And why did we delude ourselves that if communism should somehow win out, we had either the right or the power to reverse that tide? Should we not rather recall that the Europe of the Holy Alliance took precisely that view of the threat from the new U.S. democracy to the new nations of Latin America and to Europe, but had the good sense not to intervene?

Fourth, the danger — familiar enough in history — of becoming the mirror of our adversaries, particularly when those adversaries do not share our respect for the traditional concepts of "the laws of war." That is, to an alarming degree, what happened in the Vietnam War. It proved to be a war brought on by deception and fought with a ruthlessness unprecedented in our history. We used napalm to destroy people which jailed thousands of prisoners and killed about 18,000 of them. We inflicted horrors like the My La massacre on noncombatants. We dropped seven million tons of bombi on a country the size of Montana

Finally, the outcome of the wa should reconcile us to "defeat," for it illustrates a valuable lesson of history ry: that there are some wars so pernicious in their consequences that de feat is better than victory.

We need not turn to the old work to demonstrate this, to the experience of Germany in two world wars, for example. We have our own experience. Who, now, even in the deepes South, would reverse the verdict of Appointance and rejoice in an independent Confederate States of American ica, retaining slavery?

There is, I think, little doubt the future historians will conclude that the Vietnam War was one we should never have fought, or that, having fought it, it is one that we did well to lose. It wasted our resources, human and material; it undermined our tradition of the supremacy of the civil to the military authority and our moral tradition of honor and magnanimity It is because we have not yet adjusted ourselves to that conclusion that we are once more in danger of plunging into a conflict — this time in Central America — in which we will be politically and morally isolatwhich, whatever the outcome, was cost us more in self-respect and in the respect of other nations than we can afford to pay. The writer, a professor of American history at Amherst College, is the author of numerous books, including "The Empire of Reason." He contributed this comment to Newsday.

Five Less Vietnam: Reflections on a War

At the height of its involvement, America committed more than 540,000 troops to the war, and 58,000 died there. In a haunting juxtaposition of images, below, statues at the Vietnam memorial in Washington seem to read the names of their dead comrades engraved on the memorial.

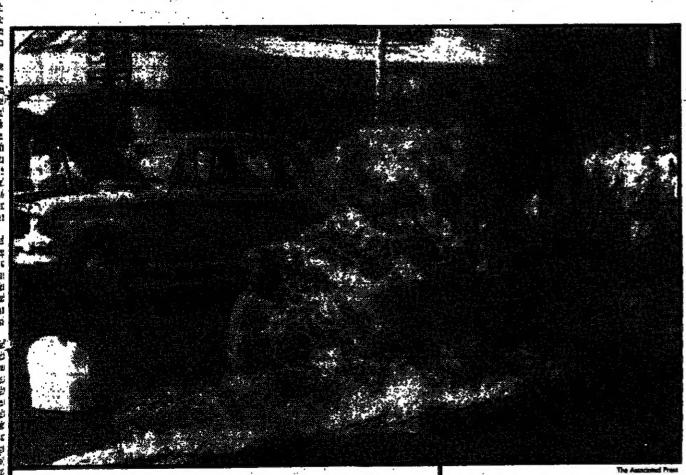

Weeping as they fled, members of a family sought refuge after North Vietnamese forces took control of the Da Nang area in March 1975, weeks before the U.S. withdrawal.

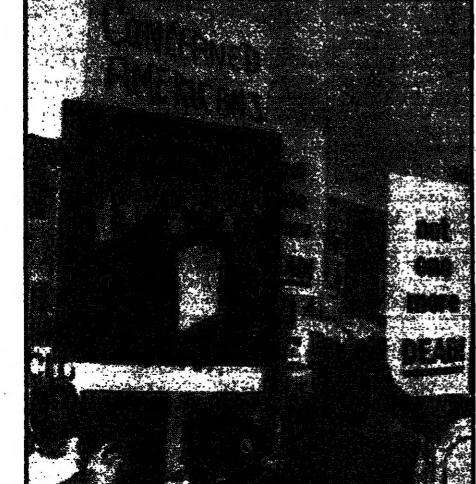

America pulled out of Vietnam on April 30, 1975, abandoning a war that it lost to public opinion rather than a superior military force. In the 10 years since, not only has the dissension died out, but reasons for it have grown unclear. A third of adult Americans questioned in one recent poll did not know which side the United States had supported and more than half did not know what the war had been about.

America lost in Vietnam, but for the victors, winning has meant less than a clear success.

The Socialist Republic of Vietnam is a dubious reunion of North and South. The economy is in shambles, the standard of living has deteriorated and the two partners are still uneasy with each other, the South feeling conquered and the North showing contempt.

In many ways, the Vietnam War was a conflict no one won. And in geopolitical terms, it was certainly a war that did not change the world. But as these photos show, it was a war that changed the lives of a lot of individuals.

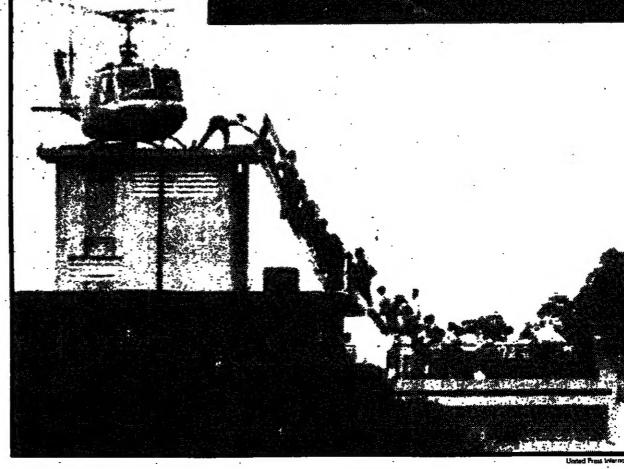

Self-immolations by Buddhist monks in Vietnam, like this one in Saigon in 1963, awakened U.S. dissent, which by war's end was unrelenting.

At the end, Americans and some Vietnamese boarded helicopters in Saigon and other key cities to be transferred to ships off the coast. The evacuation was a desperate scramble, as at Nha Trang. above, in the last weeks of April.

A CITY FOR BROWSING...AND BUYING

by Moss Murray

ONDON is one of the world centres for browsing among antiques and buying exquisite handmade pottery, china and glassware. Strangely, this desire to collect, whether as furnishings, investments, or as an expression of personal taste, is quite recent. It was hardly known before the turn of the century.

The coming of age of a widespread interest in art and antiques can be traced to the publication of several specialist magazines such as The Connoisseur (1901), The Burlington Magazine (1903), Antiques (1922) and Apollo (1925). At the same time London stores like Maples and Gillows opened sections solely devoted to 17th and 18th century furniture and

Throughout the 1920s the American journal Antiques included a regular feature 'Living with Antiques' which reflected the transatlantic importance of the new awakening and awareness ... and also, perhaps, its novelty. Jerome K Jerome foresaw the development of this enthusiasm for collecting even earlier. Writing in 1889 he speculated on the likely value of the ordinary items of his own age to future generations. He suggested that the 'sampler' which the eldest daughter produced at school would be regarded as 'a tapestry of the Victorian era' and become almost priceless.

In Three Men in a Boat he Sandra Weston, one of the exwrote: "The blue and white ecutives, told me: "Ameriside inn will be hunted up, all cracked and chipped, and sold for their weight in gold." A humorous prediction, yes, but it has all come true. Anthony Marks, whose Marks Antiques at 49 Curzon Street is possibly the finest place in London to buy antique silver, explained: "Everyone today has learned to admire the arts of the past, valuing them not only for the skill and care that went into their design and making, but also for the light they throw on lives and times that were different to our own." Marks Antiques is a place for browsing as well as buying. There are trained members of staff to help, but you are never forced to buy. And don't worry about the prices. They are among the most reasonable in London. If you

The Tempest Over Shakespeare's 'Wooden O'

by Susan Simpson

ONDON --- Sam Wanamaker has nev-er learned to take no for an answer, The American actor-director has spent 16 years campaigning for the reconstruction of Shakespeare's Globe Theater by the Thames. So far, the only thing that has been built is an architect's model but Wanamaker will not give up.

"I'm not a Shakespearean actor really, or a Shakespearean director," says Wanamaker, who is 65 years old and has lived in Britain for more than 30 years. "The idea just seemed so logical and right."

Driven by the dream of creating a "monument to the world's greatest playwright," Wanamaker is viewed as a fanatic in some quarters, and his family and friends have called him obsessive.

They tell me that if I'd spent this kind of time and energy on my career, I'd either be a multimillionaire or a huge star," Wanamaker says. A successful actor on Broadway in the 1940s, he continues to work on both sides of the Atlantic.

Over the years, he has won some influential support for the project. Prince Philip is the patron, the American oil magnate Armand Hammer is one of its principal financial backers, and Lord Olivier is the honorary president of what has been named the International Shakespeare Globe Centre. For Wanamaker, it has been "a tremendous challenge."

But he has also struggled against rejuctant bureaucrats and hostile local residents. He found the British theater establishment, with some exceptions, indifferent. He speaks now of "the stages of despair" he has experi-

His devotion to Shakespeare began at the 1933 Chicago World's Fair, where he saw his first Shakespeare play in a mock Globe, Later, as a drama student, he spent a summer acting at another Globe reproduction in Cleveland. Shakespeare was served there like hamburgers at a fast-food joint. "The plays were cut to under an hour," Wanamaker recalls with a broad smile, "We played them from noon until nine — a different play every hour on the hour."

It was a heavy dose of Shakespeare for a young actor and it left him with a deep interest in the playwight and the Globe. In 1949, when he arrived in London to make a film, Wanamaker couldn't wait to explore site of the 16th-century playhouse in Southwark, on the south bank of the Thames. What he found shocked him. "There was a plaque," be says. "That's all. It was disgraceful."

Twenty years elapsed before Wanamaker took up the Globe project in earnest. During that time, he had become a British resident and often took visitors on sightseeing tours of London, invariably including the site of the Globe. One day he arrived to discover that several warehouses had been pulled down, opening up a view of the river with the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral swelling above it. "I started leaping up and down and saying, 'Now is the chance.'

Others had tried before him. In the 18th and 19th centuries, King George IV, Sir Walter Scott and the actor David Garrick were involved in unsuccessful attempts. Fifty years ago another plan, sponsored by the former U.S. president Herbert Hoover, was cut short by World War II. Wanamaker knew it would not be easy.

From the beginning, he was determined to create a faithful reproduction of the first Globe close to its original site. The playhouse burned down in 1613 during a performance of Henry VIII—a gun fired as a stage effect set fire to the thatch roof Rebuilt the effect set fire to the thatch roof. Rebuilt the following year with a tile roof, it was torn down in 1644 after the Puritans closed the theaters. The theater's records no longer exist, but Wanamaker brought together schol-ars from around the world, who came up

HE plans call for a covered, circular building — what Shakespeare called a "wooden O" — lined with benches. The central section, the pit, would be left open to the sky, "Groundlings," or standing spectators, gathered there around the stage Elizabethan times. The amenities of a modern theater — lighting, heating or amplifying equipment — have been ruled out. Now as then, it is intended only for summer, daytime use. Such is the dedication to authenticity that exit signs would be removed after each performance.

The Globe is envisaged as the star attraction of an $18-million entertainment and educational complex. Plans have been drawn up for a smaller indoor theater, a museum and an Elizabethan restaurant-pub, which would be grouped on a plaza. Wanamaker has $6 million in pledges for the first stage of construction, raised in part through two charitable trusts, the Shakespeare Globe Trust in Britain and the Shakespeare Globe Centre (North America). He is convinced that the center would prove irresistible to tourists.

"Eighty-five percent of the people who visit this country come through London first and then go out to other interesting places," he says. "You mean to say that those people who are interested in Shakespeare, who go up to Stratford-upon-Avon are not going to come here first?"

The project site today looks like a wasteland, strewn with broken glass, scrap timber and other debris. Planning consent for the project was granted in 1980. A contractual agreement to secure the site was signed by Wanamaker, the borough council of Southwark and a property development company in 1982. But construction has never started.

The story has taken on a complexity wor-thy of a Shakespearean plot. The characters include local residents who have argued that the site would be better used for housing, a leftist borough council elected after the agreement was signed, and the property developers who initially planned to build an office to accompany the theater project.

Enter the lawyers, Wanamaker, acting for the Shakespeare Globe Trust, has served writs on the borough council and the property developers alleging that obligations have not been fulfilled. The property developers in turn are suing the council. Preliminary defenses have been filed, and while the legal arguments are examined, discussion of the case is restricted.

Wanamaker has encountered delays be-

"During the (British) coal strike of 1974, we were on the point of getting the project ready to be built when the whole country collapsed economically," he says. "The idea of going ahead with something as fanciful as this was utterly knocked on the head."

A dedicated group of supporters has stood him, but what rankles and perplexes Wanamaker is what he sees as the apathy of the British theater establishment. "You would have thought that they would have jumped on this bandwagon and marched down Piccadilly and come to the town hall of Southwark demanding this theater," he says with some bitterness. A few came "on board," according to

Sam Wanamaker.

Wanamaker, but many remained in the wings, "I went to the obvious people," he recalls, among them Sir John Gielgud, Sir Ralph Richardson and Sir Alec Guinness. "Alec Guinness outright opposed it and still does. He thinks one should put one's energy into existing theaters and not look back. In my view, he's quite wrong and very shortsighted . . . The others gave it tacit support, but reluctantly,"

Wanamaker suspects that his being an American has caused resentment among Britons, But his unshakable belief in the project and a clear-eyed view of his own reasons for acting, drive him on.

"I'm not interested in creating a self-aggrandizing home base for myself, for my artistic foibles and interests," he says wearily. "To me, it's enough of an ego-fulfilling thing to believe that I have brought this to the point of reality. I don't have to do any-

Mehdi Charef's 'Street Poetry'

by Amy Hollowell

ARIS - Across the freeway that belts this city like a modern rampart, the suburbs rise up in concrete and glass sterility, second-generation shantytowns whose residents are invariably poor, often immigrants, and never here by choice. The best most can hope for is survival. Some, legally or not, do better; but few do as well as Mehdi Charef.

An Algerian immigrant who came to Paris in 1962, Charef has just made his 1983 novel, "Ee The au Harem d'Archi Almed," into a film that was considered as a possible candidate for the Cannes film festival. The drama of his success is heightened by the fact that for more than 10 years Charef earned his living working in a tool-and-die factory and wrote in his free time.

"Le The au Harem d'Archi Ahmed" reworking-class kids in the bleak northern sub-urbs of Paris. Some are immigrants, some are-not, but they all lead the same empty gristence: no money, no work, no place to go.
Fictionalizing this world for the novel was what Charef calls a "violent release," but making the film version was even more emo-

"Facial expressions are so much more moving more real." Charef said recently in a Paris cafe. "Expressing something with a look, with a gesture, I find much more beautiful than using words."

Searching for met "hands and searching for met." Searching for just the right word in French, he said finally that his work could be defined as "street poetry," something akin to-Bruce Springsteen, the rock musician. "I love

Springsteen he said.

Charer's speech has a hard edge to it, smacking of slang and street rhydras. He makes no effort to hide his roots. Still, he does not see himself as an "Arab writer" or an "Arab filmmaker," but simply as an author, with more than one story to tell. He was born in Algeria, in 1952. Ten years later he moved with his mother to France, where his father, whom he barely knew, had already been working as a laborer for several try, he recalls, was the bitter November cold as he stood on the platform at the Gare d'Austerlitz. He remembers crying that day. No one told me it was going to be that cold," he said.

But Charef grew used to the cold, learned French, all but forgot Arabic and still found himself trapped like so many other young people in his concrete housing project.

Books and movies, which he consumed avidly, were his secret exit. He became enamored with the cinema, he remembers, upon seeing Martin Ritt's "Hombre," starring Paul Newman ("I like movies that smell like beer.") At 13 he discovered Henry Miller in the school library and decided he vanted to be a writer.

"You don't tell people you want to be a writer or a pianist or something like that," Charef said. "You say you want to be a soccer player or a boxer, because that's the way out for kids like you." He admits that a career in professional soccer would not have been beyond consideration, had the opportunity presented itself.

He left school and took a factory job, writing in the evenings and on weekends. Nothing became of the film scenarios he repeatedly sent off to producers until he received a response to "Le The an Harem d'Archi Ahmed." The producer was im-pressed, but advised Charel to make the script into a novel instead. The book, which he dedicated to his mother, Mebarka, "even though she can't read," was published in March 1983. It was praised by critics, but did not sell enough to permit Charef to leave his job. There followed an unmemorable television appearance on "Apostrophes," the popular literary talk show (topic: "Army Literature in the French Language"), where he did little more than briefly answer the moderator's questions.

A favorable review in the weekly Nouvel Observateur led to Charef's break into cinema. The article piqued the interest of Mi-chèle Ray-Gavras, the wife of Costa-Gavras. and she eventually bought the film rights to the book. Her husband also liked the idea, and after meeting with Charef, they decided

When they told me, I aged all at once," Charef says. "As long as you are dreaming, you are like a child, but the day you do it, you are an adult," He left the factory in June 983 and began work on the film.

On the set, he says he was unpleasant, at times odious, pushing the actors - most of them also young unknowns - to precision. He did not agonize over the film; he knew what he wanted and it was only a matter of getting it done. Shooting took 10 weeks late last year, on location in Gennevilliers, the suburb where Charef grew up, Paris and Deanville, on the Normandy coast. It opens in Paris next week.

T is a simple film, a simple story, shock-

The focal point is the relationship between Pat, a Frenchman from a broken family, and Madjid, an Algerian immigrant with a history not unlike Charel's. They are companions on the ragged side of life, equal partners in their camaraderie of silent desperation.

They speak very little to one another; communication is as sparse as the barren housing development in which they live. Pat and Madjid look each other in the eye only once. They do not express even the simplest of sentiments; it never occurs to them that they should, or that such feelings exist.

They don't know the words, they have a very small vocabulary. It's something that just isn't done in their world," explains Charef. "It would be like undressing, and they are painfully modest. I could have added pages of dialogue, but it wouldn't be real. What is there is what exists. Nothing more,"

Reality has touched even the film's title, which was changed to "Le The an Harem d'Archimède." The theorem of Archimedes figures only briefly in the story, when a teacher asks a pupil if he knows the name of the theorem written on the blackboard. Yes, the child responds, it is "le the au harem d'Archi Ahmed" (a malapropism meaning roughly "the tea harem of Archi Ahmed"), much to the uproarious delight of his class-

Although the movie has yet to be released, it has already won recognition. Although the film was finally not chosen for Cannes, Charef was awarded the Prix Jean Vigo last month for French cinema's best "first work" of the year.

The Prix Jean Vigo was the greatest hon-Charef said. "Especially when you consider that directors like Jean-Luc Godard, Alain Resnais and Claude Chabrol are among the past winners."

Suddenly, Charef has found himself in the spotlight of the French press, although he keeps wondering why. A recent guest appearance on the "Journal de Vingt Heures," French television's most popular evening news program, was "crazy," he says, because neither he nor the anchorman, knew why he

"It was like being thrown into a lion's den," he says. He suspects, and it is not unlikely, that the attention is related to the current furor over racism that has swept France. This surprises Charef. Indeed, he is proud that there is no racist or anti-racist rhetoric in the book or

While he is grateful to Costa-Gavras, also an immigrant, for having believed in him -sometimes when no one else did - Charef does not dwell on his part in the production. He speaks of the Greek-born director casually, as he would a friend.

His circle of friends has not changed with celebrity and he sees his family (nine brothers and sisters) regularly. They are happy for him, he says, but they just go on living their lives, as he does, except that he does not go to the factory anymore. And his mother, what does she think of her son the author? Mehdi Charef smiles reflectively.

"I'm not sure that she really understands," he says, then pauses and adds: "Yes, I guess she understands. And I guess she's probably

by John Burgess

OKYO - The Kabuki actor known as Ebizo X had been preparing since childhood. He gave up ciga-rettes and alcohol. He spent days cloistered in a studio pacing through scenes from particular plays, fortifying his voice and exercising, sometimes with a teacher in attendance.

On April I, he took a new name, Danjuro XII, and joined a succession of larger-than-life actors bearing that name who have reigned on the flamboyant Kabuki stage since shortly after its inception in the cities of feudal Japan.

There has been no Danjuro since 1965.
Theater devotees awaited the April 1 event like a royal ascension. For three centuries the Danjuro name has been passed down in his family, the Horikoshi family, sometimes by promising understudy. Many theater people were talking about the stage being artistically whole again, though a few dissenters questioned whether this man, now 38, really has the mettle for the name. But the more practical-minded are looking at the publicity that the event generated around Japan. They hope it will help draw people back to Kabuki, an ancient institution that has taken a hammering in the 20th century and is enjoyed about as much as the average American enjoys Shakespeare. The ascension was the focus of three months of special performances and celebrations in Kabuki theaters. Danjuro and a troupe from the Shochiku Kabuki company will tour the United States this summer to do it all over again.

The Japanese prize Kabuki as a national

MacMillan Moves in at the ABT

by Anna Kisselgoff

EW YORK - Writing in 1956, Ninette de Valois, founder of Britain's Royal Ballet, recalled her impressions 10 years earlier of a young student just out of the company's school — "a thin tall boy of great talent, by name Kenneth MacMillan." How varied that talent would be was evident by 1965 when MacMillan, no longer dancing but devoted to choreography, presented his own version of Prokofiev's "Romeo and Juliet." Forty-three curtain calls greeted its premiere by the Royal Ballet in London; after the three-act ballet opened in New York the same year with Rudolf Nureyev and Margot Fonteyn it remained a solid hit with American audiences during the British company's frequent visits over the next decade. Who would ever have predicted that a virtual signature piece of the Royal Ballet would one day become a major production in an American Ballet Theater season? Yet Romeo and Juliet" Ballet Theater's engagement this week at the Metropolitan Opera -with seven different casts to be on view over the next eight weeks — and the British cho-reographer and former director of the Royal Ballet himself is on hand in a role that would have been even less likely 20 years ago. Last fall, Mikhail Baryshnikov, ABT's artistic di-rector, appointed MacMillan artistic asso-ciate of the company at the same time that he named John Taras associate director.

MacMillan's potential impact on the American company as its de facto resident choreographer is, then, a crucial one. A can-did interview with him prior to the opening produced some surprises.

For instance, he does not take at all to the idea that he is at Ballet Theater to create dance-dramas as a balance to the many plotless ballets introduced under Baryshnikov's regime since 1980. Nor, he emphasizes, is he a choreographer obsessed with sexuality in ballet, as he feels his critics perceive him. "Different Drummer," his recent ballet ver-sion of "Wozzeck" for the Royal, has caused some balletomanes to use words like "revolt-

In some new autobiographical insights, he counters certain accepted interpretations of his ballets, "Triad," which Ballet Theater presented last year, was not about a homoerotic relationship into which a girl intrudes, he asserts, but was inspired by a youthful rivalry between himself and his brother. Finally, while MacMillan cannot envision a situation without ties to the Royal Ballet (where he is principal choreographer), he does not regard himself as an occasional visitor to Ballet Theater:

"I haven't been brought in to do just dramatic ballets," the 55-year-old Scottishborn choreographer declares. "I will do dramatic ballets and I will do so-called abstract ballers as well."

All this might come as a surprise to those who felt that MacMillan was meant to focus on dance-drama, a genre that had made ABT famous in the 1940s and '50s. It is a side that many see lacking in the company today. Significantly, Ballet Theater's season will also feature the 1967 psychological MacMillan ballet "Anastasia," with Cynthia Gregory and Martine van Hamel alternating in the title role of Anna Anderson, who claimed to be the daughter of Czar Nicholas II. Nonethelss, the choreographer ventures, "I think I'm about to change. And this is because of the impetus of the company. It is not that the dancers are not good dramati-cally. They're excellent, But I detect a sort of energy that I haven't found in Europe. There is a concentration on dance technique and the technique is astounding. It's brought back to me the original impetus I had about dance, as a dancer and in my early works -when I could feel the movement in my body."

MacMillan said he had had three foot operations, which shortened a dancing career that began in 1946 with the Sadler's

Wells Theater Ballet, the junior company of the Sadler's Wells Ballet (now the Royal). ABT's dancers "make me want to dance again," he says. "Twe never known such a hard-working company. They're phenomenal in class and rehearsal, and when they go straight on to the performance they're as good at 8 P.M. as they were in the morning.

HE stronger technique available in Ballet Theater has opened up new choreographic possibilities to Mac-Millan, though pure-dance ballets are not new to him. But the typical MacMillan work has concerned itself with a youthful protago-nist struck down early in life by a trauma. More directly, MacMillan feels many of his ballets have been concerned with "the person destroyed by the social milieu."

"Gloria," which seemed inspired by a poem by Vera Brittain about the British generation cut down by World War I, was actually linked to his father, MacMillan reveals. "My father was gassed in World War I and went back to a England that was supposed to be better and braver. He was unemployed. For the rest of his life he had only itinerant jobs." Asked if such ballets were based on political feelings. MacMillan seemed startled, replying that he had not thought of himself in this connection. Moreover, in seeing his father now as a victim of society, he realized for the first time what the real scar in his own youth had been.

"My mother died when I was 11. My father died when I was 15. The interesting thing is I thought that my mother's death was the trauma in my life. Now I think it was my father." This vision of a life destroyed by society is reflected again in "Fin du Jour," a deceptively glamorous ballet in which the beautiful people of the 1960s cavort on the Riviera until the day comes to an end - that is, war closes the era. "I wanted in that ballet to present a very serious theme in what seemed a frivolous setting," he says. "That's when I was growing up. And when the war started, yes, I thought it was the fin du jour. I didn't know from one day to the next whether I was going to be dead or alive. The people in that ballet are the sort who are not aware of what

Germany was doing at that time."
In 1982, MacMillan choreographed "Valley of the Shadows" based on "The Garden of the Finzi-Continis," a story of an Italian Jewish family whose children live in an en-

Callaloo, the Caribbean Stew

by Richard Lyons

HARLOTTE AMALIE, Virgin Islands — April is carnival month on the island of St. Thomas, and Arona Petersen, one of the acknowledged doyennes of Caribbean cooking, is musing over the making of callaloo. A dish served on special occasions, callaloo is a stew made of meat, fish and vegetables, with assorted herbs and spices. The name of the stew comes from an often-included ingredient: callaloo, the leaves of the taro plant. The heart-shaped leaves can be as much as three feet long and their faintly bitter taste is eminiscent of spinach.

She first made callaloo stew 65 years ago, when, like most 12-year-old girls at the time, she started helping her mother with the household cooking. Over the years, she has made innumerable batches of the pungent fare. While traveling throughout the region, she has also researched the origins of different kinds of callaloo.

"During holdiay times there is a pot of callaloo on the stove of every serious kitchen in the West Indies," Petersen said, "although the basic ingredients vary all over the Caribbean, from island to island." Because of its range, she likes to label such cuisine West Indian rather than Creole, originally the term referring to a person of European parentage born in the West Indies, Central America or the Gulf states.

Much of the variation in West Indian cooking can be attributed to the colonization and trading history of the area. "In Martinique, callaloo is African and to some extent Indian, with a layer of French," she said. "Here, the overlay may be Scandinavian, while on the other islands it may be British or Spanish." In the British Virgin Islands, she said, mixed greens are often used, while on neighboring St. Croix, the favored ingredients include taro root, which has a somehwat nutty taste, and the herb called bari-bari.

Petersen discussed her own callaloo preparation in the living room of her home overlooking the harbor as she and a visitor drank guava-berry tea and ate a rich, dark molasses

A St. Thomas native, she said she so enoyed cooking as a young girl that, as an adult, she turned it into a profession, working as a chef in Puerto Rico, the Dominican Republic, Costa Rica and the suburbs of New York City. In the process, her restless creativity encompassed cooking painting, sculpture and folk dancing. Mrs. Petersen recently coached dance at a girls' school

"I've had a hard life but a good life," said Petersen, whose youthful appearance -hair barely touched with gray, and an assured step — belies her 77 years.

Nowadays, her living-room walls are lined with examples of her primitive-style oil paintings, most of them vividly colored landscapes. Her home also features the works of Ken Petersen, her son, who creates arresting sculptures from the roots of trees.

For years, her small blue and white house, ringed by purple, orange, red and white bougainvillea, served as a chic restaurant for people familiar with some of the best of West Indian cooking. Formally named Hillside

Arona Petersen in her office.

Way but more popularly known as "the house with the green roof," the restaurant became popular for dishes such as johnny cake; funchi, a local mixture of okra and commeal that looks and tastes like mashed potatoes; meat pates and homemade ice cream. In 1971, she was honored by the Smithsonian Institution in Washington for her culinary contributions to American folk-

She closed the restaurant several years ago, conceding that age was slowing her down a bit, but she continued to operate a catering service.

Now even the catering has ceased, but Petersen's advocacy of good Caribbean cooking remains strong. Her sporadic food column in The Virgin Islands Daily News and her book, "Herbs and Proverbs of the Virgin Islands" (St. Thomas Graphics, 1974), have helped establish her as an authority on the subject.

HE said she receives mail from all over the islands and the United States mainland asking for help in determining just the right ingredients for Caribbean dishes such as salt fish salad, tare soup or turtle stew. One favorite, herring gundy, underscores the influences of the different ethnic groups of the area — it is a Caribbean variation on a Swedish dish, a blend of herring, potatoes, onions, beets, carrots and

Callaloo is another such crossover, "It started out as African survival food," she said. "Everyone who chipped ingredients into the communal pot could share in the dish that resulted."

Mrs. Petersen said callaloo was considered a "good-luck dish," often served on New Year's Day to bring peace and prosperity to the household and "to bring lovers closer together.'

For her own callaloo. Petersen uses salted pig's tail and pig's mouth or pig's snout soaked overnight and then put into a three-gallon pot to boil. A ham bone is toosed in. along with three pounds of okra, two large onions, three cloves of garlic, an eggplant, two pounds of fresh conch, hot peppers, some crabmeat, shrimp and whelk, the herb papalolo and spinach, which is often hard to obtain, or callaloo.

"When you get through, you have got enough for a crowd — that's how it should be," she said:

She refuses to be drawn into the endless arguments over who serves the best food on St. Thomas, but she has no doubts about the best maker of callaloo. "A lot of people ask me for advice about making it, and I'm glad to help because most people say I make the best callaloo on the island, she said. Raising her eyes from her teacup, she added, "And I agree with them."

sometimes regarded as a backlash to the rigid conventions of Noh, Japan's other major type of traditional theater.

Kabuki's brilliantly colored costumes, revolving painted sets and action-packed plots (swordplay and vengeance figure prominently) filled large wooden theaters that went up in Edo, as feudal Tokyo was known, and other cities.

A rancous nightlife revolved around the theaters, which in the beginning were sometimes fromts for prostitution. Brawls over actresses led authorities to ban women from the stage in 1629, and all-male casts remain the rule today.

Gradually, Kabuki came of age. A vast repertoire of dramas was written. Elaborate make-up — of which some techniques are kept secret by the actors — manners of walking, gesturing and speaking evolved that took long study to master.

Around 1675, an actor with the stage

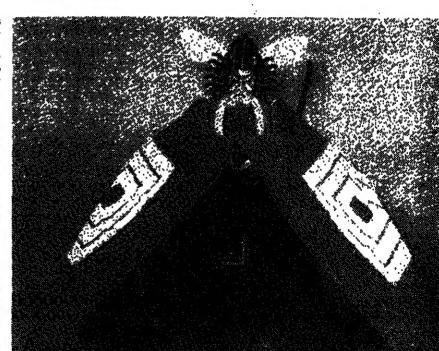

name Ichikawa Danjuro appeared. His biographies describe him as a man of letters, a playwright, a devout Buddhist and a brilliant actor, specializing in aragoto, or vigorous action parts. He died in 1704, murdered on a stage in Edo by another actor.
His son took the name and thus began the line. Other family lines were also established and endure today, but the Danjuro name is considered the most prestigious.

The new Danjuro was born Natsuo Hori-koshi. As the first son of the man who became Danjuro XI, he knew he could expect the name himself and was trained from childhood. But his father died in 1965, only three years after his own ascension, leaving his son's education to others in the family. By some accounts, many in the Kabuki world, looking at flagging box office sales, pushed for promoting the son quickly. But older actors who oversaw his training held back approval until the young man was more public two years ago, he has been especially both two years ago, he has been especially bot property. Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone turned up at a party for him at a Tokyo hotel recently. U.S. Ambassador Mike Mansfield also has been photographed with him.

To his followers, people like Hatsue Kawamura, daughter of a woman who was housekeeper to a famous actor 50 years ago, April 1 was a dream come true. "I've spent more time with Kabuki than with my family," Kawamura said recently, in anticipation of the event.

AWAMURA was one of several hundred people who showed up recently at a charity fund-raiser where the man was signing autographs — his last as Ebizo — with a calligrapher's brush and with the amicable self-assurance of royalty, fielding questions on his art. One questioner wanted to know what he is looking at when he strikes a violent, wide eyed stare at emotional peaks, a Kabuki trademark. Nothing, he said. "I imagine the sun and the moon, that one eye is the sus.

sun and the moon, that one eye is the sus. round with the pupil in the center, that the other is squinting, like the crescent moon."

Kabuki audiences these days tend to be gray-haired and sprinkled with foreign tourists. But the old flavor is recalled by fans in the cheap seats who bellow ecstatic words of admiration at strategic moments.

Danjuro himself says he feels an obligation to convey the art to the next generation but can only do so much to popularize it. "The duty of the actor is not to enlighten but to perform on the stage," he said.

He is in the prime of life, but already is preparing a successor, his 7-year-old son. April I was a milestone for him too. He will take the name Shinoske, a stage name his father had dreat the sure of lates.

Using the Company Plane: | North America's Annual Road Show Business or Ego Trip?

by Roger Collis

EOPLE tend to have extreme views about corporate planes: They are seen either as costly toys for the chairman's ego trips or as indispensable as computers in the race to improve productivity and competitive edge.

Somewhere in between is the dialectical reality. Whether or not they are cost-effective depends on what you want to achieve and how much value you put on management time. Modern corporate aircraft are fast, safe and comfortable. They offer business opportunities that are not possible with scheduled airlines. For example, how else can you go to five African cities in as many Mays except by corporate jet? But with planes costing up to $6 million and charter costs ranging from $150 an hour for a Piper Aztec to more than $1,000 an hour for a Learjet, it's important to pick the right plane for the right job. Of course, this depends on how far you want to go and how many people you want to take along. With a full load, cost per passenger often can be less than with commercial flights.

But direct cost savings are only one consideration. For most companies, convenience and time-saving count much more. Commercial airlines serve only about 170 out of the 2,000 airports in Western Europe that can accommodate private planes, although not always jets. Yough not always jets. So you can get much closer to your actual destination and avoid major airport hubs in a private plane. For example, if you want to go to Eindhoven in the Netherlands, you can land there instead of flying to Schiphol and rubbing shoulders with its hordes of travelers. Corporate planes can often use military airfields like Melun, south of Paris (ideal if you are going to Fontainebleau), or Northolt on the outskirts of London. One of the new twin-engined helicopters, like the Dauphin 2, can ferry you from Battersea heliport in central London to a beliport on the edge of Paris, cutting the time of a door-to-door trip to as low as an hour and 15 minutes. What's more, you can hold a private conference with half a dozen people on route in leather-cushioned comtail and pig's mouth or per vol schedules. fort and return home when you want to, free

Although corporate or business aircraft can include anything from a piston-engined Piper Navajo to a customized Boeing 747, the term is usually applied to a turboprop or jet seating up to 10 people, Beyond this are the commuter-type planes, like the Jetstream 31, which can carry up to 18 passengers. The term "air taxi" is sometimes limited to small, unpressurized piston-engined planes carrying four to eight passengers and cruising at up to 200 miles an hour. This compares with 300 mph for the typical turboprop and more than 500 mph for Learjets, the sports cars of business aviation.

ments over who serve takes homas, but she has be debig. Reliable figures are not available, but it maker of all also. A lorder has been estimated that the world's fleet of of advice about making undicorporate aircraft is about 14,000; at least air heund it must people in le 11,000 of these are in the United States collection of the stand, should (where, it is said, there are twice as many wes from the leacup, here w oprivate jets as commercial airliners), perhaps rt,000 in Western Europe, and a few hundred operating in the Middle East, Asia and the Far East, where the market is underdeveloped, mainly because of political and bureaucratic restrictions.

in Europe, most charter operators believe the market is set for growth. One indication of this is in Britain, where according to Larry Flowerdew, chief executive of the Air Transport Operators Association, the total num-ber of hours flown increased from 92,000 in 1978 to 137,660 in 1984. Holders of air operator licenses increased from 162 to 213 over the same period. These figures include helicopters as well as fixed-wing aircraft. Flowerdew's association claims to represent 85 percent of U. K. operators (65 companies owning a total of 350 aircraft).

Flowerdew also observes a shift from company-owned planes to chartering, a view shared by Frank MacFarlane, chief execuwe of the European Business Aviation Association in Brussels. According to MacFarlane, companies like Barclays Bank and Unilever have moved to chartering exclusively. Others, like IBM, Philips and Shell still operate their own aircraft. But whether for reasons of security or to avoid the gratuitous scrutiny of unions and stockholders, few companies are willing to talk about how and why they use business planes.

"Please, please, don't quote me," says the travel manager of a state-owned corporation in Britain, "but if you pick a prop or a turboprop and fly full load, it can be cost effective. But I'm afraid that some of the time it isn't. We used to have five of our own aircraft. They are very expensive toys."

"Buying an aircraft is a complicated decision. Very often it's more of an act of faith," says a London-based official of a major oil company that operates two corporate jets.
"We depreciate the planes over 10 years to 20 percent of the £5-million (about $6.35 million) purchase price. Direct operating costs work out at £550 an hour assuming 800 flying hours a year." On this basis, a round trip from London to Brussels (total flying time about an hour and 40 minutes) would cost £850, excluding landing fees of about £250. This compares with a return business-class ticket of £160. So six executives would need to travel in order to make the trip cost effective in purely cash terms.

To charter a comparable jet for the same trip would cost £1,900 for a day return, including landing fees. A turboprop, like the Cessna Conquest, would take 40 minutes

Expensive toys are sometimes efficient tools longer and cost £1,300. Most economical of all would be a seven-sent Piper Navajo, which would take two and a half hours but cost only £700. So chartering can be as cost-effective as a company-owned plane. it depends on corporate dispersion. For example, if a company's main pattern of travel is between London and New York, a corporate plane doesn't make a great deal of sense. But if it has locations in Nuremberg, Valencia and Lyon (which is the case for one toy company), a corporate turboprop would be a good investment if annual flying time exceeds about 600 hours. But few companies have a fleet that can meet all their needs. Many both own planes and charter them. Some even rent their planes out to other

The longer the trip the more economical a faster plane becomes. This is because the higher hourly cost is offset by a shorter journey time. It's a matter of horses for courses. A small plane like the Navajo is a good choice for up to about 400 miles, from 400 to 800 miles a turboprop makes sense, while for longer trips a jet is the best value.

According to Dominique Chevrier, chief dispatcher of Executive Jet Aviation in Geneva, a Learjet 35 becomes cheaper than a Kingair turboprop on flights that last more than 90 minutes. He contends that a Gene-va-London round trip for seven persons in a Learjet works out at the same cost per head as business-class tickets.

Most operators charge on the basis of actual hours flown from the time the plane leaves home until its return, plus overnight expenses for the crew. McAlpine Aviation, the largest U. K. operator, charges an extra £1,000 for every complete 24 hours that a plane is laid over, but there is no pro rata charge for shorter stops.

In Western Europe alone there are an estimated 700 charter firms operating up to 350 different types of fixed-wing aircraft and helicopters. It can be a problem finding the plans you need at a suitable time and place.

The Aircharter Centre, a firm of air bro-kers based at Gatwick Airport in London, has come up with what it says is a unique solution: a computerized data bank that stores details of more than 3,500 charter operators throughout the world. It came on line two weeks ago and according to the managing director, Tony Mack, contains constantly updated information on aircraft availability, seating capacity, flight times and charges. "We can provide the right aircraft at the most competitive price wherever you want to go," Mack says.

A new generation of corporate planes is lifting off the drawing boards. For example, turboprop aircraft with rear-facing "pusher" engines, like the Avtek 400, are claimed to be 30 percent more fuel efficient and can fly at sub-jet speeds with a range of 2,000 miles.

The day may not be far off when the business traveler will routinely avoid the hassles of major airports and commercial

by Andrew H. Malcolm

T usually begins in the morning, anywhere from 45 to 60 minutes later than planned. Again and again, each family member shuttles between house and car, carrying suitcases, satchels, piles of books, toys and maps. It is a scene to be repeated millions of times in the coming weeks as spring revives the land. For just as regularly and predictably as birds return north after winter's chill, year after year, generation after generation. Americans take to the road.

They go in search of newness, adventure and togetherness. But car trips, like some new toys, can wear out very quickly, what with fatigue, flat tires, exhausted radiators and seething sibling rivalries. Yet hope persists — or memories are short.

And so Americans set out to wander the byways of North America, with ritual stops every few hours at such readside attractions as Dairy Creme, Dairy Delite, Dairy Freeze or

They enjoy a quintessential fact of American life: that the car is the liberator of the spirit. Going somewhere, anywhere, in some sort of vehicle has been an integral part of American lore from the days of the prairie schooner. This urge hasn't changed now just because the vehicle is a car, the fuel is gasoline instead of oats and the dashboard talks back, with a Japanese accent. It is the automobile, though smelly and costly at times, that regularly frees the multitude from the confines of the city, the home and the general routine of life. In a complex, harried life, the car is one of the few things that gives the average American a feeling of being in complete control. Driving, he can shut out the outer world simply by rolling up the window. The automobile traveler is a king on a vinyl bucket-seat throne, changing direction with the turn of a wheel, changing the climate with a flick of the button, changing the music with the switch of a dial.

More important, perhaps, vacationing Americans on an automobile trip can experience again, for a few days or a few weeks, a sense of serendipity increasingly rare in our computerized world. It is not bad, on an ordered globe of precision and straight lines, sometimes to drift at whim, turning down this road or that for no particular reason, stopping here or there

The car trip can draw the family together, as it was in the days before television. But the trip itself has changed in recent decades. As recently as 30 years ago, there were few Interstates and fewer toll roads. Although the glove compartment might have contained a roadside restaurant guide by Duncan Hines that seemed to list virtually every place in the country (including specialties and prices), many mothers still made picnic meals for traveling. In those days a car radio was not called an audio system, and one speaker seemed sufficient.

"UCH, however, remains the same. There are the sounds: the wonderful whine of rubber tires against the pavement, the friendly honks of immense truckers in immense trucks responding to waving youngsters and, of course, the wind rushing by, bringing the scents of farms, fir forests and fresh thunderstorms somewhere nearby. The radio announcers discoursing authoritatively on the sale of grains and animal parts.

And there are the back-seat squabbles as brothers and sisters contend for space, comic books or pillows. An armistice can sometimes be negotiated by mediators in the front seat who threaten denial of motel swimming pool rights that evening. Or diversionary factics can be attempted: "Look at that," an adult can say, peering intensely through the windshield. Even blase, wides nearly raise it their expectations and the look of the content of video-age kids can't rein in their curiosity enough not to look. And if it is something as ordinary as a 50-million-year-old, snow-capped mountain range, or a canyon continually carved by nature since way back, even before the Beatles were born, well, it will earn a yawning, "Oh, yeah, I saw that on television."

(If, on the other hand, the scene is something truly speciacular, something like, say, an empty football stadium whose global significance was confirmed by being televised last New Year's Day, then the view will likely evoke, "Awesome!" — a high accolade this month.)

Roadside picnic shelter in New Mexico.

There are familiar sights: Stockinged feet sticking out of a station wagon's rear window. A long line of passenger cars dutifully cruising along, for now, at 54 miles an hour behind a state trooper's car. A 46-foot-tall neon cowboy, beckening to passers-by, the urgent signs that order vacationers to "See Frontier Fort," "See Elvis' Car," "See the Presidents in Wax," "See 15-Ton Log" and the more sedate "Food-Fuel-Lodging, E-

There develops, too, on these longer drives a sense of the freeway fraternity. That car with the rusry Indiana license plates, the one that was in the motel parking lot last night and at the restaurant at breakfast this morning, is passing again and is given a wave of friendly recognition. Something special has brought strangers together for one moment on the same stretch of highway.

That something is a flight from the routine, a hunt for something new or a rediscovery of something old. It is a time free of chores and appointments and telephones. It is a chance to be absorbed in a landscape large enough to hold miles of mirages, beneath skies bigger than cities. And it is an opportuni-ty to take note of such things, and then to share them with

HERE are other important discoveries to be made: Meeting people from other parts of the country, and savoring their cultural and linguistic differences. Visiting an array of East Coast historical shrines in segments connected by the same roads the Revolutionary Army may have used. Or, if you're a youngster, hanging your hand out a speeding car's window, and discovering, for yourself, the principle of aerodynamic lift.

I can recall driving through Nova Scotia one rainy day, and gaining a new appreciation for the elasticity of a young mind when, from the back seat, my preschool son. Christopher, rattled off the alphabet - backward. That same afternoon, the sun re-emerged over the twisting, coastal Cabot Trail, unveiling a wave-punctuated panorama of greens, blues, reds and browns. I'm not sure which scene I remember most — the Nova Scotia seaside, where the tall cliffs meet the shifting, moody surface of the North Atlantic, or Christopher's mindscape. But the auto vacation made both possible.

I can remember, too, discovering one day, from the back seat of a 1948 Plymouth, that my father had a previously unnoted passion for cherry Life Savers, Whenever a red Life Saver would come up in those rolls of candies, dispensed from my mother's to be sure, but something that began to make that big godlike father more of a human being, thank goodness.

There were other lessons learned, too, in the touring family car, Long vacation evenings spent in rural Michigan quietly cruising dirt roads "hunting" wildlife, especially the deer bounding in and out of the lines of trees. The point those nights seemed to me to be tacking up the largest number of confirmed sightings. "Oh, there's another one over there! That's 42 for me." But I know now there was a larger lesson being taught, as I began to realize that I was just one of many kinds of creatures sharing this landscape.

I was alone in a car the first time I encountered, by accident.

the road through Beartooth Pass, on the Wyoming-Montana border, quite possibly North America's most spectacular drive. I have returned many times since, with my family, to that northeast entrance of Yellowstone Park. And each time we rise through the layers of cooler air along switchback after switch-back to the 10.940-foot summit's alpine meadows (where snow still stands in August), I see new things, there and in myself.
Oh, yes, there is often a drowsy ennui that seeps into the vehicle during droning drives on well-known roads on the way home. But more often there are some delicious moments of discovery, such as the time near Guernsey, Wyo., when the car's headlights flashed across a little sign for the Oregon Trail.

It had never occurred to me that anything of the famous pioneer route survived. The official state road map carried no mention of anything special at Guernsey. But we followed the sign, driving a mile south of town across the North Platte River to a cliff with century-old grafitti. On a nearby knoll, by the beam of our flashlight, we came upon the tracks of past American travelers. There, in a narrow passage between two boulders, thousands of slow-moving, metal-rimmed wooden wheels had worn deep ruts in the stone. The tracks remain for all to see how fragile were the wheels, how small were the wagons. how big was their idea.

The experience was, well, awesome,

Following are four favorite routes in differ-ent parts of the continent described by correspondents of The New York Times.

Vermont

The soul of New England may plausibly be said to lie in the southeast corner of Vermont, amid the winding roads that snake through forests of pine and birch, never far from a burbling stream.

Sail past the big, bustling interstate highways and enter Vermont instead by a quieter path, climbing up Route 112 from western Massachusetts. The route runs along an elevated ridge, through apple orchards and clumps of maple trees, across narrow bridges, past farms where outcroppings of rock jut from the dry fields.

When the road enters Jacksonville, pause to visit the general store, then head off on Route 100, through the scenic Deerfield Valley, to a little town known as Wilmington. One of the attractions here is the Coombs Sugar House, where you can watch maple sap boiled down to pure maple syrup in big

Then, as part of a big loop around Lake Whitingham and the Harriman Reservoir, take Route 9 west out of Wilmington to Searsburg.

Follow Route 8 as it veers south from Searsburg: a winding road creeping through dense forest, which opens occasionally upon a breathtaking panorama of south Vermont, Follow the signs for Readsboro and Whitingham, past Sadawga Pond. Roadside streams rush by, creating little waterfalls, the only sound audible among the trees, the white clapboard houses and the weatherbeaten red barns. The road descends steeply and suddenly back to Jacksonville.

From there, retrace the path north along Route 100, but this time turn right at Wilmington and head east on Route 9, past the Hogback Mountain ski area, until a sign points the way to South Newfane. A well-traveled but unpaved dirt road runs north, under a canopy of trees, to a covered bridge, which leads to South Newfane. Newfane itself, the well-tended model of a New England town, is just a short drive away.

Robert Pear

South Carolina

Along the Atlantic coast, between the cities of Savannah and Charleston, lies South Carolina's Low Country. It is a flat landscape of black water and marsh grass, one of the last major impolluted marine estuaries on the East Coast.

Seen from the narrow two-lane highways that meander beneath canopies of mossdraped oak, it is a screne and graceful place; a long, low horizon broken only by the flight of herons. Here are small towns and poor houses and roadside stands selling fresh crab. Along the coastal islands that divide the marsh from the sea, there are black communities that date from the time of the Civil War, when freed slaves came to make their living here by farming and hunting and

The area is now changing. Vast real estate developments have begun to eat into the old coastal plantations, but there still is much to Start at Hilton Head Island, 30 miles northeast of Savannah. There, in Harbour Town, near the island's southern extreme, leave the car and take the three-hour boat trip and tour of nearby Daufuskie Island, where automobiles are not permitted and the residents still speak with a trace of the Guliah accent of their forebears.

Back in the car, head north, past the crowded resort hotels and condominiums of Hilton Head and on to the mainland, following U.S. 278 through the tidal marshes for 22 miles to state road 170, and then bear northeast, across Port Royal Sound, past the entrance to the Marine Corps Recruit Depot at Parris Island, and on to Beaufort. This small port city, pronounced Bew-lort and founded in the early 18th century, is one of the little known jewels of the Southeast coast.

Drive slowly along Bay Street, past the antebellum homes, and visit the John Mark Verdier House, where the Marquis de Lafayette was entertained in 1825.

William E. Schmidt

Michigan

I-94 between Detroit and Chicago is 275 miles of monotonous, heavily traveled highway, but travelers can break that monotony with two detours into the past.

Starting westward from Detroit, a visitor could spend at least part of a day at Greenfield Village, in nearby Dearborn. The 254acre complex is Henry Ford's attempt to recreate some of the events and places that were pivotal in the transformation of the United States into an industrial power; the Wright Brothers bicycle shop, for example, and one of Thomas Edison's laboratories. The village is open from daily except holidays, from 9 to 5; admission is $8, $4 for Marshall, Michigan, is about halfway between the two big cities, and is a good to break the journey. If the rows of gingerbread-bedecked Victorian houses that line the streets seem rather grand for this little community of 7,000, it is because the early settlers thought that Marshall would become the state capital and built accordingly. Political power went elsewhere, but the gracious style remains.

For overnight accommodations, the Na-tional House Inn is conveniently situated just off the town square. It was built in 1835 to be an overnight stop on the stagecoach route between Detroit, then a small fur trading post, and Chicago. It was restored in 1976, and is the oldest operating inn in the state and possibly the region, with 16 rooms and suites priced at $44 to $73 a night, including breakfast.

Thirsty travelers have been known to stop off at the Copper Bar on Michigan Avenue. Marshall's main street. Light and dark beers are served by the pint in Mason jars, and peanuts come straight from an antique cof-fee roaster. Just toss the shells on the floor.

John Holusha

Mexico

Visitors to Mexico who spend their time only in the bustling, smog-laden capital or at one of the many beach resorts can come away thinking of the country as a cross between Los Angeles and Miami. A quick drive south from the capital, at least as far as Cuernavaca, can help correct that mistake.

Leave Mexico City by the Cuernavaca toll road, heading south to climb along the sides of one of the many mountains that surround the capital. About 15 minutes along the way, look back for an overview of Mexico City's ever-growing sprawl; farther on, you will see the two majestic volcanoes, Ixtacihuati and Popocatepeti.

Those lucky enough to pass this way during harvest season can see hay being scythed, stacked and baled in ways left behind in the United States long ago. Miradores — over-looks — offer vistas of the unspoiled valleys. Here are the vendors of delicious quesadillas, filled tortillas fried in hot oil, known to be consumed even by those of us in the business of telling tourists what not to eat.

Just after the huge switchback known as

La Pera, you can turn off for a side trip to Tepoztlan, a charming, lazy market town with a 16th-century Dominican monastery and church off its main plaza. The physically fit can make the two-hour climb to the the Cerro of Tepozteco, some 2,000 feet ahove the town, to see the pyramid there and gain an extraordinary view of the entire region.

Cuernavaca itself, 14 miles from Tepoztlan, is becoming a miniature Mexico City. But many Mexico City residents make the trip just to while away the afternoon sipping drinks surrounded by Zuniga sculptures, peacocks and pretty people on the lawn of Las Mananitas, at Ricardo Linares 107. The former palace of Cortés, now a museum just off the main plaza, is worth a visit, particularly for its heroic Diego Rivera murals.

closed world as the Nazis prepare their

Most of the MacMillan ballets created di chara di controlla para di chara di controlla para di controlla since the late 1970s are unknown to the American public partly because the Royal Ballet comes here less frequently and be-cause his "sordid" experiments are not considered good box office by American producers.

The state of the s Once considered to be on the laconic side by interviewers, MacMillan now proves quite willing to talk about his works. "My was inspired by a book about the Brontes — Brother, My Sisters" (1978), for instance, Bramwell and his sisters, Anne, Charlotte and Emily, and their father. As children, the Bronte siblings created an extensive fantasy world, filling notebooks with minute stories of their fictional kingdoms. "It was Bramwell who was the hero of all their books," MacMillan says. So my ballet became a ballet about a brother and all the sisters, about their fantasies. I didn't make sisters, about their fantasies. I didn't we lie to know it was the Brontes."

Nevertheless, MacMillan did transpose some of his information to the stage. "When the Brontë children did anything wrong, the father would put a cloth on the child's head and face so that they would be uninhibited and talk about what they'd done. That's very Freudian. I used a mask in the ballet."

Speaking of sex, which some people say MacMillan does too often in his ballets, the choreographer declares, "I don't go out of my way to show the sexual side." In his ballets about Isadora Duncan and the Hapsburg Crown Prince Rudolf, for instance, "this side is important to their lives, and this is also 1985." Certainly such ballets show anothing you won't find in books, plays or films, but, he adds, "I can't find any English ballet critics who go to plays and movies.

They're encased in their little ballet world. "I regret that a lot of critics think of me in ferms of sexuality on the stage. I have a sacred side as well "Here, MacMillan refers to his Mahler ballet, "Song of the Earth," and his ballet to the Fauré "Requi-

In the last few years, MacMillan has directed stage plays - Strindberg's "Dance of Death" with Edward Fox, "The Chairs" and "The Lesson" by Ionesco, and Tenessee Wil-liams's "Kingdom of the Earth."

Directing plays took his bias toward dra-ma in ballet to its logical conclusion and perhaps accounts for his interest in doing something new. He has certainly used non-classical movement recently and he admits to being influenced by Martha Graham's idiom, now that he has seen more Graham

Yet he affirms, "I'm a classicist at heart," and stresses the following point with respect to his place in Ballet Theater, "Historically, I come from a great classical school. I think when Misha Baryshnikov became director here, the seeds were sown to create more of a classical company than it had been before - and I think he has succeeded." One situation is now shared by nearly all major ballet companies: "Every company is in a state of transition. And most are now run by male ex-dancers." The fact that no women directors are at the helm strikes Mac-Millan as stranger than it would an Ameri-can. British ballet had two founding mothers Ninette de Valois and Marie Rambert and produced major company directors such as Beryl Grey, Alicia Markova, Celia Franca and Mona Inglesby. "In my days with Dame Ninette, we all used to look to her as a mother. Every company leader takes on the mother or father role." Yet this is hardly the way today's dancers and audiences regard the new young directors. Most are intent on change and "all present directors are having great difficulties," MacMillan says.

"The audiences expect every company to be as it was. Nobody likes changes. It's a very important point."

NEW YORK — Prices were higher at the close of the New York Stock Exchange Thurs-

SKOKIE, Illinois — G.D. Searle & Co. said Thursday that it has bought for $388.1 million 7.5 million shares of common stock from trusts established by the Searle family.

The purchase, for $51.75 a share based on Wednesday's closing on the New York Stock Exchange, comes four weeks after the board of directors abandoned plans to sell off the company either in whole or in parts.

Searle said it would pay for the stock with $250 million in 60-day notes and the balance in five-year subordinated notes.

five-year subordinated notes. After selling the stock, various Searle family trusts will hold 21.39 percent of the corporation's 41.8 million outstanding shares, down from 33,35 percent prior to the transaction, The shares were sold from trusts established by the Searle family, but none was from trusts held directly by the Searle family, a spokesman said. The corporation also received a four-year right of first refusal for the remaining shares held in Searle family trusts.

'Do-It-Yourself' Chip Sales Seen Quadrupling by '89

By ANDREW POLLACK

New York Times Service ANTA CLARA. California — David S. Sandifer, a development engineer for Geosource Inc. in Houston, makes microelectronic chips for use in his company's seismic equipment. But unlike most people who make semicon-ductors, Mr. Sandifer does not wear a white "bunny suit" and work in a sterilized factory with huge furnaces and chemical

Mr. Sandifer makes the chips himself, on his desk. After feeding the design for a chip into a computer, he puts a blank chip in a little programming unit, waits a few seconds and the chip is programmed to his design. "We make our own custom chips," he said. Such "do-it-yourself" chips have represented a tiny niche of the semiconductor business for years. But now, technological improvements promise to make these chips, known as field-programmable or user-programmable logic, more popular. Dataquest, a market-research concern, estimates that sales of such customer-definable logic circuits will nearly quadruple by 1989, to $910 million, from $251 million in

More than that, however, these systems, dubbed desk-top silicon foundries, represent in a very rudimentary way a direction in which the whole semiconductor industry is moving — toward customized chips that can be turned out speedily.

URRENTLY, if a company needs a chip that is not available off the shelf, it must go to a semiconductor company to have it made. The process can take weeks or even months. With a customer-programmable chip, the wait is reduced to minutes. Panatech Semiconductor has just introduced such chips. The customer chips are also especially useful during the early stage of a product development, when a company might need only a few prototypes.

The first customer-programmable chips were memory chips, which merely store information. They were known as programmable read-only memories, or Proms, and Eproms, which are erasable Proms. By the late 1970s, customer-programmable logic devices began appearing, starting with the programmable array logic device, or Pal, introduced by Monolithic Memories.

These chips, now offered by most of the major semiconductor companies, contain pre-wired circuits. The user customizes the chip by blowing fuses on certain circuits, leaving only the circuits needed to perform the desired function. While these chips have done moderately well, they use a bipolar technology that uses a lot of energy. And once a fuse is blown, it cannot be mended.

Now companies are starting to develop programmable circuits using a process known as complementary metal oxide semiconductor, or Cmos. While not as fast as bipolar chips, Cmos chips use far less energy. Moreover, the chips can be erased by ultraviolet light and reprogrammed.

Leading the way with these new chips is Altera Corp., which introduced its first chips last year. Panatech Semiconductor introduced a similar product last month. Others expected in the market this year include Monolithic Memories and Cypress

Altera sells a $2,500 kit in a box the size of a shoe box. It consists of software, a card that fits into International Business Machines Corp.'s PC, a cable and a programming unit the size of (Continued on Page 15, Col. 5)

ICI Profit Rose 8.9% In Quarter

Akzo Reports 28% Increase

By Bob Hagerty ternational Herald Tribu LONDON — Imperial Chemical Industries PLC disappointed the stock market Thursday by reporting an 8.9-percent increase in pretax profit for the first quarter. The slower-than-expected growth reflected duil performances from fertilizers and agencyl chemicals. fertilizers and general chemicals.

Separately, Akzo NV, the Dutch man-made fiber and chemical com-pany, reported a 28-percent rise in first-quarter net profit.

ICI said that pretax profit rose to £267 million ($326 million) from £245 million a year earlier. Net profit totaled £155 million, or 24.8 pence per share, up 6.2 percent from £146 million, or 23.9 pence a Sales grew 15 percent to £2.72 billion from £2.37 billion.

On the London Stock Exchange, ICI shares tumbled 25 pence to close at 740 pence, even though analysis had been reducing their earnings forecasts in recent days.

"It's a disappointment to have one's worst fears confirmed," said Mark Quilliam, an analyst at James Capel & Co.

But ICI said the performance was good in light of slower economic growth in most of its mar-kets. "We're on budget," said Alan Clements, ICTs finance director.

Mr. Clements said that the company had strong performances from crop-protection chemicals, pharmaceuticals, fibers, petrochemicals and plastics. Severe winter weather depressed sales of fertilizers and some heavier chemicals. The relatively small dyestuffs business remained unprofitable. Profit in ICI's oil business slipped to £22 million from £31 million a year earlier. That decline reflects higher petroleum-revenue taxes and declining output from the Ninian field in the North Sea.

Poland Nurtures Private Firms

Raises, Bonuses Test Socialist Work Ethic

By Michael T. Kaufman New York Times Service WARSAW — In the gritty industrial section of Warsaw, at the end of the tram line and next to the large state-owned fac-tories, lies a modern medical equipment plant. Its private owners are tolerated and even hope that they and others like them succeed in transforming the work ethic of socialist Po-land.

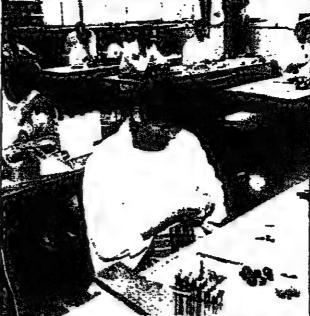

The company, Plastomed, which has 350 workers producing calibrated pipettes and electronic laboratory equipment, is one of the 650 privately owned companies financed from abroad that have sprouted here in the last three years with the blessings from economic planners.

Although these private com-panies, all involved in light manufacturing of items such as cosmetics and clothing, together account for scarcely I percent of the value of Poland's national production, they are being in-creasingly viewed as the cutting edge of an effort to revitalize a limping economy and invigorate a sluggish culture of industrial

Despite occasional ideological attacks on the whole idea of private, profit-oriented businesses from hardline and doctrinaire Communist Party factions, the government of General Wejciech Jaruzelski is nurturing at least some of these companies and is studying an expansion of the concept that would draw larger amounts of private capital for large-scale joint ventures beyond

As originally conceived and outlined during the upheavals of the Solidarity period, the government program limited investment and ownership to foreigners of Polish descent. At the time the idea was explained here as just another attempt to establish links with the Polish Diaspora, those estimated 40 million people of Polish origin who live beyond the country's borders. Un-der the original plan such people could invest as little as $2,000 to open a business whose profits light industry.

Workers at the Plastomed factory in Warsaw, one of 650 privately owned companies operating in Poland.

Because of the original links to Poles abroad, the concerns were called Polonia companies. The name is still used, even though, in its search for capital and modernizing technologies, the gov-ernment has expanded the pro-gram to include those without Polish ties.

Obviously a major objective of the plan was to attract capital to a Poland hit hard by restricted credits from the West. The plan was geared to attract export-ori-ented projects and the foreign owners are permitted to repatriare 50 percent of their gross bard correccy profits. But beyond the pure and stilllimited economic elements, the Polonia companies are being studied as models for changing the behavior of a work force that has close to the lowest productivity record in Europe.

"There is no doubt that what Poland needs is a new work ethic to replace attitudes that have developed in the last 40 years," an aide to General Jaruzelski said in a recent interview. Those attitudes are enshrined in jokes and sayings often heard among workers. "Whether lying would be untaxed for three down or standing erect, a thousand zlotys you can expect," is one such adage. Another says, "The state pretends to pay us, and we pretend to work.

Absenteeism runs high, maternity leaves extend to three years and recent visits to state automobile, beer and glider factories re-vealed a highly casual attitude toward work and a seemingly large number of unoccupied

Throughout the Eastern bloc, the dominant economic quest is for mechanisms to increase productivity. In Hungary, for example, workers in state factories now are permitted to band to-gether and bid to produce specified numbers of items after regu-lar hours of work, functioning effectively as private contractors but doing their regular jobs on state-owned machines after regular shifts.

Not surprisingly, studies have shown that the Hungarian workers are more productive, for the most part, when their time means money than when they are using the same machines during their regular shifts.

Chrysler Profit Dropped 28% In First Quarter

HIGHLAND PARK, Michigan - Chrysler Corp. said Thursday that its first-quarter profit fell 28 percent from the like period of

The automaker said it earned $507.6 million, of $4.18 per share, in the first quarter compared with $705.8 million, or $5.64 per share, in the opening quarter of 1984.

Its pretax earnings for the quar-ter were $725.1 million, a 2.6-per-cent increase over last year's $706.2 million. But net earnings declined because of a $217.5 million tax bill.

Chrysler became a corporate tax-payer again in the fourth quarter of 1984, Before that, the company was able to use tax credits earned during its close brush with bankruptcy.

The company said that its worldwide sales in the first quarter rose 10.2 percent to a record $5.4 billion from $4.9 billion in the first quarter of 1984. The previous sales record of $5.3 billion was set in the fourth quarter of 1984.

The company said that it sold 547,047 units in the first quarter, an increase of 5.9 percent from the 516,672 units sold in the first three months of last year.

General Motors Corp. announced earlier this week that firstquarter profit dropped by about one-third to $1.07 billion on sales of $24.2 billion, American Motors Corp. last week announced a $29-million loss for the quarter.

Ford Motor Co. said that its earnings statement would be re-leased late Friday. Analysts said that they could be lower due to a larger tax bit. In the first quarter, Chrysler and

Ford, which were offering sales in-centives to customers and dealers and special financing, gained market share at GM's expense.

In 1984, Chrysler earned a re-cord $2.38 billion on sales of $19.6 billion, more then triple the $700.9 million profit made in 1983 on sales of $13.3 billion.

For the fourth quarter of 1984 Chrysler reported a record profit of $609.7 million, or $4.91 a share, on sales of $5.3 billion, compared with net income of $118.3 million, or 91 cents a share, on sales of $3.8 billion in the last quarter of 1983. Chrysler recently announced a joint-venture project with Mitsubishi Motors Corp. of Japan to produce small cars at a plant some-where in the Middle Western United States.

And Chrysler's chairman, Lee A. Jacocca last week announced a 50-50 joint venture with Samsung Co. of South Korea for automotive parts and components for Chrysler. Mr. Iacocca said that the venture would "study the possibility of car assembly in Korea. (AP, UPI)

Dollar Gains Sharply During New York Trade

NEW YORK — The dollar
gained in New York after closing mixed in European trading.
Dealers in New York said the driving force behind the dollar remains a conviction that it has weathered the bad news about the U.S. economy in the first quarter and can look forward to stronger growth this quarter.

In New York, the British pound ended at $1,2085, down from $1.229 on Wednesday; at 3.1480 Deutsche marks, up from 3.105 DM; at 9.5900 French francs, up from 9.465 francs; at 252.45 yea, up from 250.85 yen; and at 2,6240 Swiss francs, up from 2.585 Swiss

The U.S. currency gained substantially against the pound in London, but was still well below records set in January. The pound closed at $1.2043, down from $1.223.

The dollar ended in Frank-furt at 3.1203 DM, down from 3.1275 DM on Wednesday; at 9.515 French francs in Paris, down from 9.56 francs; and unchanged at 2.5995 Swiss francs (AP, Reuters)

COAL MINE FOR POWER GENERATION IN PAKISTAN

THE WATER AND POWER DEVELOPMENT AUTHORITY (WAPDA) A SEMI-AUTONOMOUS AGENCY OF THE GOVERNMENT OF PAKISTAN PLANS TO

INSTALL AND COMMISSION AS SOON AS POSSIBLE THE FIRST OF A SERIES OF 300 MW CAPACITY INDIGENOUS COAL-FIRED POWER GENERATION STATIONS. DISCUSSIONS ARE BEING HELD WITH USAID, WORLD BANK, ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK AND OTHER FINANCIAL AGENCIES REGARDING THE FINANCING OF THE PROJECT, COMPLETE FEASIBILITY STUDIES FOR THE POWER PLANT AND COAL MINE(S) ARE NOW UNDERWAY WITH USAID ASSISTANCE.

The quantity of coal required for the first unit will be about 1.4 million tons per year and is to be supplied from the Lakhra Coal Field situated about 5 km. to 50 km. from the three proposed power plant sites.

The Lakhra Coal Field is spread over an area of about 400 sq.km, located to the North-West of Hyderobad and about 220 km. North-East of Karachi. There are private as well as public lease holdings in the field. The area presently being investigated is leased to a public sector organization working in cooperation with WAPDA.

Experienced expatriate and Pakistani private companies are invited to participate in the investment, development and management of the Options open for consideration have been revised and extended to include the following:

- 1. Majority participation on an equity basis in the formation of a new company to develop and manage surface and underground mines in the Lakhra Field to supply coal to the power plant, with full private sector management and operation of this new coal mining company.
- Long-term supply contract of part or all of the coal required for the first and/or subsequent power plant(s) from private an/or public concession areas in Lakhra. The supply of the coal could be direct, through one or more long-term sub-contractors, or both.
- 3. Either one or a combination of the above options plus overall responsibility for the integrated management of the design, construction supervision and the coordinated start-up of the mines and power plant.
- 4. Variants of one or more of the above listed options that are consistent with the equity and management objectives indicated above. 5. Those private sector parties who are interested in installing power plants of their own, based on Lakhra Coal, for sale of energy to WAPDA may give their indications with their desired plans.

All qualified parties, both Pakistani and expatriate, who are interested in one or more of the above listed options and who have not already done so are invited to write to or telex the undersigned no later than May 15, 1985 to obtain a copy of the Information Package and to enter into discussions. The Information Package will contain the original request for Expressions of Interest, amendments to it, and status reports on USAID funded feosibility studies now underway. Contacts from principals are preferred.

The deadline for the final submission of pregualification information from firms interested in either or all of the options is June 30, 1985. Firms will be prequalified for one or more of the options by August 15, 1985. Prequalified firms will be invited to take observer status at their expense in on-going project feasibility studies, and will receive regular progress reports and final reports on these studies. FOLLOWING DISCUSSIONS WITH PROSPECTIVE AID DONORS AND APPOINTMENTS OF A FINANCIAL ADVISOR TO THE PROJECT, IT IS PLANNED TO ISSUE A FORMAL REQUEST FOR PROPOSALS IN LATE 1985 OR EARLY 1986 TO FIRMS THAT HAVE BEEN PREQUALIFIED FOR ONE OR MORE OF THE OPTIONS SELECTED FOR FINAL CONSIDERATION.

The parent company's after tax profits excluding extraordinary gains increased from F.Fr. 115 million (1983) to F.Fr. 127 million

In addition, after tax extraordinary gains amounted to F.Fr. 53 million vs. 135 million for the preceding year. Consequently, total after tax profits amounted to F.Fr. 180 million in 1984 vs. F.Fr. 250 million in 1983. The high figure of 1983 is explained by the fact that capital gains were exceptionally important due to the sale of certain subsidsories during 1983.

After tax consolidated earnings for the Group (not yet audited) excluding extraordinary gains will amount to approximately F.Fr. 202 million vs. F.Fr. 187 million a year ago. After tax extraordinary gains for the year will be in the range of F.Fr. 62 million vs. F.Fr. 142 million for the preceding year. Announcement by a South African organization A MODEL IN MINING

Mr. R.A. Plumbridge, Chairman of Gold Fields of South Africa Limited, talks to David Carte, Editor of the "Sunday Times Business Times".

Mr. R. A. Phumbridge Chairman Gold Fields of South Africa Limited

old Fields of South Africa, front ranker among mining houses in South Africa, is descended from 2 company launched by Cecil John Rhodes nearly one hundred years ago, of which it became independent in 1971.

Its associate companies include three of the richest gold mines in the world. Within the group as a whole, earnings amount to some US$1.3 billion annually. In 1984 Gold Fields accounted for 139 tons of gold-more than 12% of the free world's new production—as well as significant quantities of coal and base metals. On the Johannesburg Stock Exchange (JSE), Gold Fields and its administered companies were collectively valued at US$4.35 billion.

Under Gold Fields administration are the celebrated Driefontein and Kloof operations, both of which have prospects of continued high yields at relatively low cost over a long life. Driefontein Consolidated's two divisions last year produced 73 tons of gold; at US$2.67 billion, Driecon's market capitalisation makes it the second largest company on the JSE. Other important gold mines in the Gold Fields group are Deelkraal, Doorn- a large proportion of profits for explora-fontein, Libanon and Venterspost. Main investment companies in the group are New Wits, Selected Mining and Vogelstruisbult; limited strategic investments outside mining include stakes in Commercial Union, the group's short term insurer, and in Standard Bank Investment Corporation.

Shareholders in Gold Fields of South Africa have realised an average all-in return of their investments of 30% per annum in the past five years, Consolidated Gold Fields of London has the largest single holding of 48% in the South African company which, however, enjoys autonomy in management and is entirely responsible for its own funding. Gold Fields of South Africa is distinct from other mining houses in South Africa in having largely resisted the urge to diversify out of mining into other industry and finance. No less than 91% of group income is from mining - 82% from gold and 9% from other metals and coal. Its position is a matter of deliberate policy, says Chairman Robin Plumbridge. We have analysed the South African mining industry and taken the view that it will remain competitive in world commodity markets as a supplier of quality products on a basis of reliability, thanks to the country's excellent infrastructures. Gold Fields means to continue playing a major role in that success story by wholehearted commitment to a business in which we are acknowledged experts, both technically and manageri-

Mr. Plumbridge is cautiously bullish on gold. In the belief that it still has important financial and industrial use, he argues that large US budget and balance of trade deficits, together with currency fluctuations and the world's unresolved debt problems, will underpin gold's hedging role; meanwhile, at lower dollar prices, industrial demand has tended to provide a floor price for the metal.

Gold Fields, whose corporate antecedents were instrumental in discovering the fabulously rich gold reefs of the West tion. Besides investigating gold prospects south of the existing Kloof mine, it is exploring the feasibility of mining platinum in the northern Transvaal as well as several promising coal deposits.

Recent acquisitions bear out the group's policy of diversifying its mining interests. The 90% interest in Clydesdale Collieries broadens a coal base so far represented only by Apex Mines; an increased stake in O'okiep Copper brought with it the management contract previously held by Newmont Mining. Gold Fields has a 55.4% share in the Black Mountain lead/zinc/copper mine and has the right of first refusal on Phelps Dodge's sale of its 44.6% share.

"We will mine anything that is economic," declares Mr. Plumbridge, who is unpersuaded by the avant garde thesis that the world has entered an age of low growth in demand for commodities: "There may be shrinking per capita consumption of metals in the industrialised world, but the size of the industrialised world is increasing."

Gold Fields is an equal opportunity employer as far as South African legislation permits it to be. Through the Chamber of Mines the group has thrown its corporate weight behind efforts to abolish the last vestiges of job reservation. Its own remuneration practice is based on the principle of equal pay for equal work done, rather than on minimum wages which, in Mr. Plumbridge's view, would tend to aggravate unemployment in a sub-continent characterised as it is by grinding poverty. "Starting wages must be market-related. The priority is to get a person employed; once he is on the ladder he can start to climb by improving his own productivity through our training schemes."

Rapid advances in technology and allround productivity notwithstanding, South Africa's mines remain labourintensive. Of 700,000 jobs provided by the industry as a whole to workers from six countries, Gold Fields accounts for some 82,000; of the total yearly wage bill Witwatersrand in the early 1930's, retains of US$1.8 billion, the Gold Fields group's share is some US$232 million.

COLUMBIA SECURITIES N.V.

Amsterdam

Shareholders are invited to attend the Annual General Meeting to be held on Wednesday, 15th May, 1985 at 10.30 hours at the head office of the Algemene Bank Nederland N.V., Vijzelstraat 32, Amsterdam.

- 2. Report of the Management for the financial year 1984 and report of the Supervisory Board.
- 3. Adoption of the Annual Accounts for the financial year
- Determination of the appropriation of profit.
 Composition and renumeration of the Supervisory Board. - proposal to appoint a new member of the Supervisory Board, thus fixing the membership of the Supervisory
- Board at four members.

 The Supervisory Board has put forward nominations with regard to the proposed appointment and has deposited these for inspection. Mr. Roger Desaint is placed first in these nominations.

The respective documents are available at the office of the Company, Noorderstraat 6, Amsterdam, Holders of bearer shares wishing to attend the General Meeting must deposit their shares ultimately on Friday 10th May with the Algemene Bank Nederland N.V. or with Banque de Neuflize, Schlumberger, Mallet, Paris. A deposit certificate will be issued to such shareholders, which, upon surrender, will entitle them to attend the meeting and cast their vote.

Holders of shares registered with the Company in its share-holders' register must inform the Managing Director in writing at least four days prior to the meeting that they wish to attend the meeting in person or by proxy.

Amsterdam, 26th April, 1985 The Supervisory Board

Moët-Hennessy

The Board of Directors of Moët-Hennessy, the holding company, met on April 19, 1985, and approved the financial statements for the fiscal year to The Board will propose to the Annual General Meeting of Stockholders, convened for June 13, 1985, to declare a dividend of Fr. 23 per share. Including prepaid tax (a tax credit of Fr. 11.50), the total dividend will come to Fr. 34.50, against Fr. 30 in 1983.

An interim dividend of Fr. 9 having been declared on February 4, 1985, an additional dividend of Fr. 14, plus prepaid tax (Fr. 7 tax credit) will be paid out at the beginning of July.

CONSOLIDATION POLICY CHANGES

Concurrently to introducing the new accounting rules applicable to French companies, Moët-Hennessy decided to adopt for its consolidated accounts in 1984, the rules generally applied in the United States and by most of the world's leading corporations. This decision, which is justified by the Croup's expanding operations abroad, by its increasingly diversified stock ownership, and by the need to gain access to the world capital markets, has entailed certain changes in the presentation of the financial statements. To allow year-to-year comparisons, consolidated financial data for 1983 presented in this year's consolidated financial statements have been restated according to the new methods.

The changes mainly concern the definition of the scope of consolidation, the recording of foreign currency translation differences, and the calculation of depreciation and deferred tax liability.

the 28% rise in sales revenues flows from a very substantial volume increase, reflecting considerable growth in real terms. Increased average sale prices have amplified this growth, the incidence of currency parities playing a beneficial role.

Pre and post-tax income growth reflects a considerable improvement in the Group's overall profitability.

This sector's 1984 sales totaled Fr. 3,072,000,000, compared with Fr. 2,525,000,000 in 1983, up 22%. Pre-tax income was up 33% to Champagne shipments increased by 18%.

Cognac and spirits

The Cognac sector's sales totaled Fr. 2,145,000,000 in 1984, up 46% on the 1983 figure of Fr. 1,460,000,000. Pre-tax income was up 73% to Fr. 496,000,000.

Shipments were up 9% in volume terms.

Perfumes and beauty products Sales rose once more in 1984, totaling Fr. 1,519,000,000, against Fr. 1,252,000,000 in 1983, representing an increase of 21%. Pre-tax income for 1984 was up 19% to Fr. 210,000,000.

Parlums Christian Dior reported a 22% increase in sales and a 35% increase in pre-tax income, with Fr. 230,000,000 in 1984. With a 19% increase in sales, Laboratoires Roc reported a loss of Fr. 20,000,000.

Armstrong's sales remained steady in dollar terms, but it reported an operating loss of Fr. 60,000,000 before taxes, in addition to non-recurrent provisions totaling Fr. 18,000,000 related to the completion company's

The impact of these losses on net income is significantly lessened by the rules of liscal integration in the United States.

1985 has begun well from a commercial viewpoint. At the end of March, consolidated Group sales were up 24% on the first quarter of 1984. However, the year's performance as a whole is highly dependent on the state of the economies in our major markets in the second half of 1985.

The sales growth was due mainly to higher selling prices and changes in exchange rates. Akzo said. Sales volume rose just I percent. interest costs fell, but the company's tax burden rose to 36 percent from 24 percent a year before. Trading profit from chemical products surged 55 percent to 180 million guilders, partly because the severe winter boosted shipments of highway salt.

Profit from fibers fell 13 percent to 88 million guilders, reflecting weakness in the American Enka unit, hit by a surge of cheap im-ports. Enka Europe showed im-proved sales and profit.

Five succinct reasons why the Waldorf-Astoria is New York's finest luxury hotel.

Comfort.

The kind of comfort that comes from investing $110 million in our hotel over three years, including our Park Avenue lobby, all public and private function rooms, our restaurants, and our new, luxury guest rooms

Entertainment

The choice of entertainment you get from three of New York's finest restaurants, offering haute cuisine, hearty steaks and fresh seafood, or gourmet Japanese fare, plus live grand piano music nightly, Sir Harry's unique safari lounge, the Terrace Lounge, the popular Oscar's restaurant, and more.

Innovation.

The kind of innovation regarding our guests' unique needs that makes us the only hotel in the world which hosts a nation's embassy, and enables us to offer privacy and security to visiting heads of state, as well as helping each of our daily guests who need the impossible done immediately.

Elegance.

The unparalleled elegance of a priceless collection of Art Deco treasures which adorns our hotel. And the Waldorf Towers, which has been the celebrated residence of a former president of the United States, one of our country's favorite songwriters, a great national hero and those most prominent in society.

Value.

The value that comes from staying in New York's finest hotel, but not New York's most expensive hotel. You can spend more, but you can't get more.

When business or pleasure brings you to New York, stay at New York's finest luxury

MEN AND ANGELS

By Mary Gordon. 241 pp. $16.95. Random House, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Richard Eder

WHETHER art's deep purpose is to imi-tate life is one thing; but it is not to imitate the current received discourse about life, except by way of illustration or parody. There are genuine and engaging emotions in Mary Gordon's "Men and Angels." and the problem of a woman's balance between maternity and autonomy is real and fairly put. But the emotions and the problem lack hosts with voices that are precisely their own. Gordon's relationships are better done than her charac-

Anne, the protagonist, is a pretty, intelligent woman in her 30s with a passion for art, a Harvard Ph. D. in art history, and no opportunity to use them. She is a devoted mother and wife in a college town where her husband. Michael, is a professor. Her creative abilities have no place in their life; people "invent her awry," seeing in her mainly a graceful and charming domestic creature.

Then an old friend and mentor asks her to write catalog notes for the works of a forgotten American woman Postimpressionist, a friend and contemporary of the Fauves. To take the assignment. Anne cancels plans to accompany Michael on a year's work in France. To take care of the children, she hires an odd, religiously obsessed young woman as her housekeeper.

"Men and Angels" takes Anne through several sorts of adventure and ordeal. First, there is her exploration of the character and work of the painter, a flinty genius who broke with her family, lived in Paris for herself and her art, neglected her illegitimate son and died in an unfathomable mixture of pride and regret. Anne is transported both by her subject and by the joy that she takes in her craft, so different from her domestic swamp.

Helped and befriended by the painter's daughter, Jane — a formidably autonomous figure in her own right - Anne puzzles over a character and destiny. At her own center, she muses, there is "not something hard and bril-liant but something soft and flat." Yet for all her bedazzlement, she can't come to terms with her subject's maternal callousness

A second strand in the book is Anne's attraction to an electrician who comes to rewire her house. Adrift in her confusions, she tries comcally to seduce him, and fails,

Finally, there is the gradual and terrifying encroachment of Laura, the housekeeper. Softmannered, ungainly and infinitely helpful, she was savagely rebuffed by her mother as a child and has turned to a religious dementia that she tries to conceal. Anne, occupied with her other crises, fails to notice the madness until she must storm to the defense of her endangered children.

She has not been able to protect them completely. They have seen a terrifying violence and, she reflects, it will always mark them. We more middle-class security; henceforth, "they would grow up like the children of the poor unsheltered by illusions, she means. She goes on to weave the uncertain balance between maternal duty and maternal limitations, and conversely, between the need for autonomy and the limits of autonomy.

The moral is inconclusive but thoughtfully done. It is the story that suffers; partly, perhaps, out of Gordon's need to balance her thematic points.

There is some graceful and acute writing.
Her description of a museum reading-room with its row of busy heads and empty air overhead is delightful. The complexities of maternal feeting are explored thoroughly and with some originality. Reflecting on her bright but awkward son. Anne feels a faint thrill, beneath her concern, that, if he will have a hard time being loved, he may come to be honored and even feared.

The seduction scene with the electrician approaches farce. When Anne sways towards him, he suggests kindly that putting one's head between one's knees is good for dizziness. Quite marvelously, she does so, before rearing up and blurting out her passion.

But there is a great deal of woodenness # ,id doubtful rhetoric in the characters. Laura's interior monologues are a travesty of dementia; she all but cackles. This puts quite a burden on the story. It is not suspense, exactly, If you see somebody dropping a rattlesnake between the sheets in the first act, you assume that it's only a matter of time before someone goes to bed. Gordon does not simply telegraph her message; she tends to send it by parcel

Anne is sympathetic, on the whole, but her monologues can fall into a deadly windiness. As, for example: "How had she become the woman she was? At age 38, never to have performed a daring action. She was tired of it, tired of the weakness that had marked her life."

Language apart, Anne's emotions are so much the center of the book that they absorb its energies. The other characters tend to a dim or cursory, though there is a kind of unassembled splendor about Jane, the painter's kind and ruthless daughter. Anne's children lack much specificity; so do her woman friends. The electrician's mixture of old-fash-ioned scruples and childlike need makes us want to see him more clearly, but we never do. And the other men are shadows, brought in only for their effect upon Anne.

At times, for all its seriousness, "Men and Angels" is like a story about somebody playing solitaire. There is one player. The other charac-ters are cards. The women are face cards. Jane is the queen of hearts, lavish but flat. Laura is the queen of spades. The men are plain threes, fours and fives, except for the electrician, who might be the jack of diamonds.

NEW YORK — The rumors are flying again. For the second time this young season, a poor performance in a series against Boston has imperiled the job of New York Yankee Manager Yogi Berra.

The Yankees lost to the Red Sox. 7-6, here Wednesday night and continued their sloppy play afield. They made two crucial errors, bringing their total for the current optional off-day workout on Monday; he was unhappy that Berra had not made the session mandatory, "We made four errors Tues-day night. Boston scored two unearned runs and won by a run. Don't tell me we didn't need practice on ground balls the day before," he said.

One highly placed source said Berra could be gone if the Yankees lost to the Red Sox in Thursday's series finale. "I haven't made any decision, but I'm not going to be deterred," Steinbrenner said — before Wednesday's loss, New York's seventh in 12 games this year.
"What I think is best for the team is what I'm going to do."

Said Berra: "We're just giving es to bed Gordon does not anity too many runs away. What mure t message the tends to said the can you make? They're better than the said to said the said to said the said to said the said the Berra has already survived one Boston massacre this year. The Yankees were swept in the seasonopening series at Fenway Park, but possibly saved Berra's job by rebounding in Cleveland. This time, with the Red Sox coming to town, the manager had promised "a war," but the two skirmishes thus far

The top of Wednesday's first inning was a defensive disaster. Dwight Evans walked and Jim Rice lollowed with a single that center fielder Rickey Henderson booted, putting runners at second and third. Mike Easler lifted a fly to left field - which Ken Griffey dropped. Tony Armas then hit a 2-1 pitch off the left-field foul pole

After Mike Pagliarulo pulled New York to within 4-2 with a tworun home run in the second, Boston took a 6-2 lead in the third. Evans walked and Rice singled. Two outs later, Bill Buckner doubled home Evans and Marty Barrett brought Rice in with a single.

Al Nipper lost his control in the third, when the Yankees rallied for four runs and a 6-6 tie. Henderson walked and Randolph doubled him to third. Don Mattingly singled home two runs and Dave Wmfield walked. Don Baylor greeted reliev-er Steve Crawford (2-1) with an RBI single and Winfield scored when Griffey bounced into a field and Duane Walker homered as If Everton fans were stummed when Bayern Munich's Dieter Hoeness tallied the game's first

Sampson Hampered by Fouls, Rockets Bow to Jazz, 112-104

SALT LAKE CITY - One of the few men in the National Basketball Association capable of stopping Ralph Sampson is the gny with the whistle.

With the 7-foot-4 (2.23-meter) Sampson on the bench with foul trouble here Wednesday night, rookie Akeem Olajuwon — the other half of Houston's twin towers - was left to battle Mark Eaton and the Utah

Jazz. He couldn't do it alone.

Adrian Dantley scored 29 points to lead Utah to a 112-104 triumph over the Rockets and a 2-1 edge in their best-of-five first-round playoff series. The Jazz can advance, to meet the winner of the San Antonio-Denver series, with a triumph here Friday night. In other opening-round games Wednesday, Washington clobbered Philadelphia, Detroit edged New Jersey and Chicago nipped Milwaukee. On Thursday, Boston was to play at Cleveland and Dallas was on the road against Portland. The Celtics and Trail Blazers hold 2-1 leads in their series.

"The game was in my hands and I didn't produce," Sampson said. "I missed two foul shots, a turn-around jump shot, and then I got my sixth foul. It was my

With 1:13 left and Utah leading, 103-102, Sampson missed a free throw: Dantley answered with a basket to give the Jazz a 3-point lead with 52 seconds to go. A series of free throws provided the final margin.

Utah hit 78 percent of its foul shots (39 of 50), while the Rockets hit 16 of 28 for 57 percent.

Bullets 118, 76ers 100

In Landover, Maryland, Cliff Robinson scored 21 points and ignited a third-quarter surge to keep Washington alive with a 118-100 rout of Philadelphia. The lets trail the best-of-five series, 2-1, with Game 4 scheduled here Friday night.

Robinson outscored the entire opposition with 14 points in the third period, when Washington battered the 76ers, 30-13, and vaulted to a 22-point lead. Philadelphia missed 14 of 19 shots from the field in the quarter and committed 8 turnovers. Bullet center Jeff Ruland, who was out with injuries for most of the last two months of the regular season, scored 25 points.

Pistons 116, Nets 115

In East Rutherford, New Jersey, Isiah Thomas hit a 20-foot baseline jumper with two seconds to play, giving Detroit a 116-115 victory and a three-game sweep of the Nets. The Pistons, who dropped five-ofsix regular-season games to New Jersey, advance to the Eastern Conference semifinals against the Boston-Cleveland winner. Terry Tyler paced Detroit with 23 points, while Buck Williams and Albert King had 28 points apiece for the Nets.

Bulls 109, Bucks 107

Putting Passion in the PC

By Russell Baker N EW YORK — Many tycoons of the computer industry have written begging me to tell them how to recover from the sales personal-computer business.

First, let us speak of decorator colors. It is obvious that nobody in the computer industry ever heard of decorator colors. They have made all their home computers clay-colored. Shoppers who wandered into the home-computer store found themselves confronted by masses of drab, clay-colored machinery and were naturally crushed.

They had seen those dreary gray plastic-encased machines in the offices of hospital-bill compilers, in television shows set in police stations, in collection centers where officially authorized tyrants browbeat the helpless on behalf of governments and vast monopolistic

Even people determined to buy must have been put off. Think of the millions who wanted to say. "Don't you have something in magenta or lime?"

· Henry Ford treated his customers with the same arrogance during all those years when they were told they could have a car in any color they wanted, so long as the color they wanted was black. Car buyers put up with that for years. They had to if they wanted cars, and wow! did they ever want cars! Whereas almost nobody really wants a home computer, because, after all, when you get right down to it, can you drive a home computer to the seashore, or screech around town in it on Saturday night tossing empty beer cans at pedestrians, or spend all day Sunday washing and waxing it?

So the marketing problem is to persuade people to want home computers whether they want them

It is the same problem the phone company faced in selling people on second, third and fourth telephones, the same problem the garment industry faced in persuading people to pay double for jeans that said "Chemin de Fer" or "Basta Luigi" on the hip pocket.

The phone company did the trick with decorator colors, and the garment industry did it by making denim seem sexy. Once people could buy a phone to match the paint in every room in the house, it was easy to double and triple telephone sales. Which brings us to sex. If sex can sell jeans it ought to be able to sell anything, because, well, what are jeans, in the final analysis, but overalls? They were invented to be worn while tramping around the barnyard, and then the U.S. Navy cut off the tops and made sailors wear them while shoveling coal. Talk about dreary clothing!

No problem for the garment in-dustry. It sewed them skintight on nymphets, stitched a name culled from the European Common Market phone directory onto the hips and made the upwardly mobile millions shell out big cash for duds born for forking the manure pile.

The home-computer industry apparently doesn't know about sex yet, for there was never a suggestion in any of its advertising that a home computer could take years off your physical appearance. pounds off your hips and inches off your waist; that it could make you smell irresistible and make your hair shine brighter; or -well, nev-

Instead, what did it talk about? Recipes. And balancing your checkbook. They were constantly telling you how swell life would be when you could balance your checkbook on a home computer. Imagine: "We've got this weird machine, and how can we get people to buy?" somebody asks. And somebody replies: "I've got it! We'll make them think about kitchen work and balancing their check-

No wonder the market went bust. If you want to part a person. from a lot of money for something he doesn't need, you'd better lull him with a dream first.

What you don't do is remind him of his checkbook balance. That will only remind him that he probably can't afford a computer, and that, anyhow, if he's too dumb to balance his checkbook on paper, he'll never learn to do it electronically.

Sex is the solution, gentlemen. Paint those things Passion Orange and get them into the boudoir.

Short-Story Writer Paley Works Like Poet: 'Real Slow'

By David Remnick

Washington Post Service
TEW YORK — Grace Paley hardly exists west of the Hudson or east of Fifth Avenue. Her short stories are a kind of New York chamber music in which the instruments are the voices of the city — more specifi-cally Greenwich Village, more specifically 11th Street between Sixth and Seventh.

She works slowly, noting the flattened consonants and the political yarns heard on the benches of Washington Square Park, the eternal kvetching in the coffee shops of Bank Street, the playground yelps on West Fourth, the good smell of bread rising in Zi-to's and the pizza cooling in Paley is attuned to all of it. Sometimes she does her best observing while handing out protest literature on the corner of 11th and Sixth. Once in a very great while, the voices and smells, the emotional strength and overheard conversation will flower into lines. Her new book of stories, "Later the Same Day," took more than a decade to grow.

"I'm always making little notes. false starts, beginnings," Paley said, curling up in an old rope chair. "I wrote poetry for years before I ever wrote a story. I still work like a poet. Real slow."

She has the friendly aspect of a TV grandmother. With all her notes and effluvia scattered around her, she says, I can't even keep a journal. I'm always losing the book. I have no discipline. Certainly not the steely discipline of a Joyce Carol Oates or an Anthony Burgess, the sort of literary industry that produces bulging books in and for all seasons.

"I can't work like that and never have," Paley said. "There have been long periods of my life when I was bringing up my two kids and playing with them at the playground or working on political things and the stories had to wait. I've let all that happen. No regrets. The stories come when they

At 62, Grace Paley has published three collections of stories,

Grace Paley: Prose "was the real breakthrough."

remarkable for their clarity, their sense of place, their sympathies. As Philip Roth has said, Paley's stories display 'an understanding of loneliness, lust, selfishness, and fatigue that is splendidly comic and unladylike."

She seems to be of a type, a New York type, ready for lampooning. The city is filled with would-be writers who wear their concerns like sandwich boards, who struggle for a quiet eccentricity in a city where difference is a merely a given. But Paley is the senuine article, unpretentious, funny and wise. In the words of her neighbor and colleague, Don-ald Barthelme, she is a "wonderful writer and troublemaker."

Paley's second-floor living room is vintage Village: Book-shelves crammed with Isaac Ba-bel, Anton Chekhov and Karl Marx, records piled into a carron that once held jars of mayonnaise, a rag rug, artifacts of politics, woolly pillows strewn on the floor, three empty light sockets in the ceiling.

Paley's parents. Isaac Goodside and Manya Ridnyik, left Russia in about 1905 and settled a total of 45 tales. Nearly all are in New York, first on the Lower East Side, then in the Broax. When they were young in Russia they had been Social Democrats, opposed to the czar. Goodside had been exiled to Siberia and Ridnyik to Germany. In New York, Goodside helped teach himself English by reading Dickens. He became a doctor. His wife took care of the house. Paley often does sweeping and washing when her stories won't come un-

"When I was little I loved to listen to my parent's stories, all the talk that went on," she said. "I loved to fisten and soon I loved to talk and tell."

She studied at Hunter College and New York University but did not take a degree. When she was 19 she married a movie cameraman, Jess Paley. They had two children, Nora and Dan, now 35 and 33. She studied writing with W. H. Auden at the New School for Social Research in the 1940s. "I really went to school on po-eary. I learned whatever I know about language and craft from writing poems. I worked at it for years and years but I was never a great poet. I didn't know what to do about it, except keep at it.

"When I was in my early 30s and I wasn't doing any work I was worried because what I was most interested in were the lives of women around me and our various relationships. I just couldn't write about that in poems, and so I started trying a little prose. That was the real breakthrough."

Her first story, "Goodbye and Good Luck" is the work of a namral. It is about a young woman in love with a great actor of the Yid-

Only two of the stories in her first collection, "The Little Dis-turbances of Man," had appeared before the book came out in 1959. "And the magazine that took them," Paley noted, "was Accent. a little journal in Urbana, Illinois. The way the book got published was that I had the nerve to show them to Ken McCormick, an editor at Doubleday who is the father of one of my children's friends. He saw three of them and said, Write seven more and you'll have a book."

Short-story collections rarely sell many copies. For years, Pa-ley's publishers goaded her to write a novel. She tried, All it did was delay her second collection of stories, "Enormous Changes at stones, the Last Minute," which came out Life - political and personal —interrupted the writing for long stretches of time. She has been an activist for years, working against nuclear power, the war in Vietnam and U.S. involvement in Central America, and for various feminist causes. She frequently reads her work at political forums in the city and beyond. Yet polinics has not bludgeoned her art. Her stories are often political but free of the sort of agit-prop fury that turns words to wood.

When "Enormous Changes at the Last Minute" was finally published, it attracted what the industry likes to call a "cult" audience, which means small and devoted. The cult is growing, however, Ear-lier this mouth a film written by John Sayles and based on three stories in the collection opened at the Film Forum in New York, and Paley will join the likes of Stanley Elkin and Toni Morrison in Paris May 4 for a discussion of contemporary American litera-ture at the Musee d'Art Moderne de la Ville de Paris; Paley is also giving a lecture at the museum on

The short story is enjoying a renaissance in American literature, and Paley's publishers hop-ing "Later the Same Day" will attract a wide audience. The book won terrific reviews in Time and Newsweek magazines and in The New York Times.

It is not, however, any more or less - commercial than Paley's previous work. At their best the stories are still direct, swift and vibrant. The characters have aged along with Paley. At times she picks up Irish voices in the air, sometimes black or Chinese. Sometimes the voice sounds much like her own, as at the start of 'Listening :

"I had just come up from the church basement with an armful leaflets. Once, maybe only twentyfire, thirty years ago, young women and men bowled in that basement. played Ping-Pong there, drank hot chocolate, and wondered how in God's separating world they could ever get to know each other.

Paley makes her living teaching at Sarah Lawrence College and City College. She is divorced from Jess Paley; she and her second husband, the architect and writer Robert Nichols, divide their time between the apartment in New York and a cabin in Thetford. Vermont. They are apart for months at a time, Paley in the city and Nichols in the country.

"I can't stay away from the block too long," she said. One frequent character in Paley's stories is Faith, an alter ego who first appeared in "The Used-Boy Raisers" in the first book, resurfaced in "Faith in the Afternoon," "Faith in a Tree" and "The Long Distance Runner" and now is heard from in "Dreamer in a Dead Language" and "The Expensive Moment," two of the strongest stories in "Later the Same Day."

Faith, like Paley, is "at that lively time of life, which is so full of standing up and lying down," a feisty period in which all experience and thinking has come to an extraordinary maturity. "Faith is the one who does the most work for me," Paley said. "I don't think I'll ever kill her off. But I can't ever say what's ahead for my stories. I don't have any "I'm glad to have written what I've written and I'm at a point in

It probably made the Pentagon's day: Clint Eastwood arrived large meeting with Michael L Burch assistant secretary of defense for public affairs, to get backing for a film on an Army sergeant's career in recent wars. Eastwood got Pentagon help for the 1982 film "Firefox," but Burch said no decisions were made.

Tom Hayden has an idea for a different kind of Vietnam memorial: one to Vietnam War protesters. The California state legislator, husband of the actress Jane Fonda was a founder of the radical Stadents for a Democratic Society and a defendant in the Chicago Seven trial following riots at the 1968 Democratic National Convention. Referring in an interview to the Vietnam veterans' memorial in Washington he said: "While we should celebrate and respect the sense of honor and patriotism that led men to light in Vietnam, there was no less a sense of honor or patriotism among those of us who opposed the war onl of our sense of what this country was all about I think the antiwar movement deserves some kind of credit and some kind of memorialization."
